Pat McCarthy - happy, hardworking artist

By Theresa Sullivan

Pat McCarthy's watercolors are fresh, light and alive. Her home is warm, soft and comfortable. Her artwork and her home are her self-portraits.

Pat's work has been exhibited at Symphony Hall and is currently on exhibit at City Hall, Boston, Quincy Cooperative Bank, Cohasset and South Shore Arts Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset.

She has received many awards, including the Air France Outstanding Watercolor Award and the Copley Society Award.

Seven years ago, the closest she came to painting was sketching on a pad. Pat and her husband, Jim, raised a family of four, Mark, 26, Robin, 24, Lisa, 23, and Jimmy, 21. She was busy raising her family and did not have the time to paint, she said.

"When my oldest son was about four, I was taking oil painting lessons. While my back was turned for an instant, he grabbed one of my tubes (of paint)," Pat said. "Naturally, it got all over him. It took a long time and a lot of screaming to get it off — you have to use turpentine."

That experience caused her to put her paint brushes away for a while.

Pat graduated from the New England School of Art in Boston, but ended up working for an airline, she said. At that time she wasn't doing any painting, but "she was always sketching," Jim said.

Six years ago, she saw an ad in the newspaper publicizing a course taught by Charles Mahoney of Scituate, one of the top watercolorists in the country, Pat said. She's been with him ever since.

"I have another very good instructor, Roz Farbush," she added. The McCarthy's have a Charles Mahoney watercolor of the Quarterdeck on Front Street, Scituate and two Roz Farbush watercolors hanging in their home.

Pat's enthusiasm for painting caused the smile which comes easily to her to radiate across her face. "I enjoy (painting) flowers. I love (painting) buildings...There isn't too much I don't like," she said.

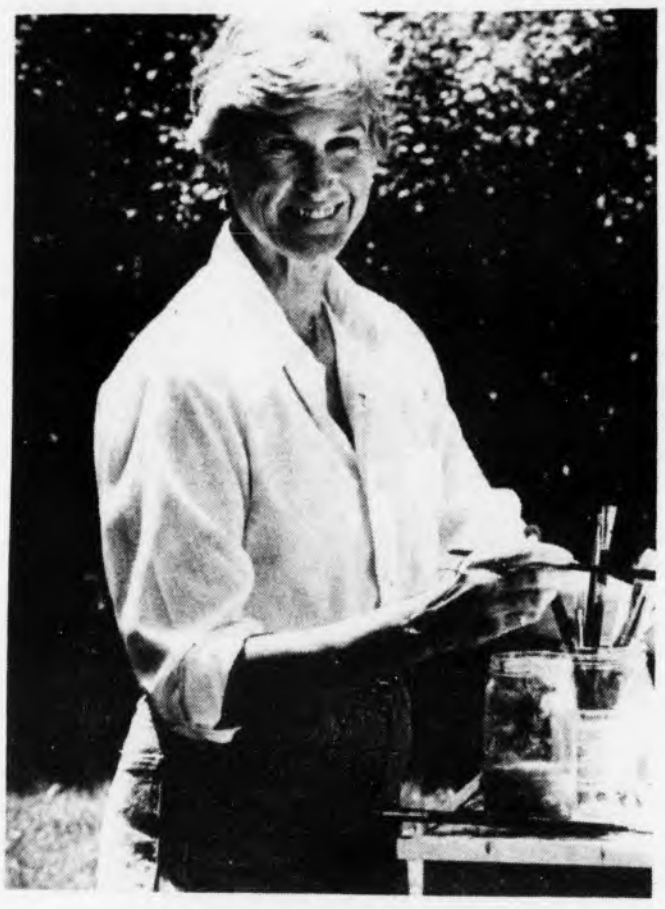
Pat has found painting relaxing, but hard work. "I completely lose all sense of time and space," she said. She gave an example: "I never miss lunch; Jim can attest to that. But when I'm painting, I don't even think of eating. It could be 2 p.m. and I don't even notice. You put so much into it, that it's like jogging for five miles."

Jim supported — with pride — Pat's painting. "There's a lot of pressure on a woman when kids reach teenage years," he said. "Painting has relaxed Pat and it has been a great outlet for her. She completely forgets everything."

Pat also plays with the Cohasset Tennis Club and belongs to the Garden Club, Jim said. "I think she tries to keep herself physically and mentally fit."

The McCarthys run together on the beach. They both began running long before it became acceptable. Jim said people would drive by him when he was running and look at him as if he was out of his mind. Some people would stop their cars and others would even try to run him over, he chuckled. "When I started running, I was so self-conscious that I used to run at night," Pat said.

Pat participates in week-long workshops where artists paint from 8 a.m. to sunset. Artists are given instruction in the morning while on location and they paint on their own at the spot of their choice in the afternoon.



But Pat hasn't always taken that kind of time to paint. She said she doesn't get much painting done when she is at home. "I don't really enjoy painting when my family is around. I don't like the confusion," she said. "You feel like you should be doing something for them," Jim said to Pat. "I feel like I'm doing something frivolous," she said.

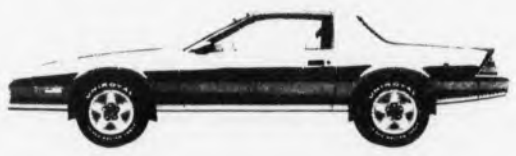
Her son Jimmy didn't mind his mother painting. "I think it's good. She should do what she wants to do. I like some of it, too," he said, as if that surprised him.

Each of her children has shown support in his or her own way, she said, from Mark giving her art supplies for Christmas, to Robin hanging several of Pat's watercolors in her room, to Lisa being there when Pat received the award from the Copley Society.

Now that her children are grown, Pat does find time to paint, but not as much as she would like. "I heard somebody say that you're better off painting every day for 15 minutes, rather than four hours one day a week," she said. "I paint eight or nine hours a week. (It takes Pat two hours at the most to complete a painting.) I don't paint as often as I like or as I should.

"If I take lessons, I'm more apt to paint. I have to discipline myself. I think of home as a job." She said local artists have really helped her to improve. "There's a strong support system on the South Shore. There are so many talented people. Association with them is like playing tennis with a really good player — you can't help but get better," Pat said.

Pat McCarthy



Pat wasn't one to boast, but Jim did not hesitate to praise his wife. "Pat is pretty well-known on the South Shore. She is one of the charter members of the Scituate Arts Association Gallery on Front Street (Scituate)," he said. Pat is also a member of the North River Arts Society.

Jim continued, saying, "I'm happy for her. If she's happy, I'm happy. For someone with no art talent, I appreciate her talent." Pat added that Jim does have an appreciation for art.

Last Christmas, Pat told Jim that if he was looking for an additional gift, there was a sable brush she could really use. He figured he'd pick it up as a stocking stuffer, Pat said smiling. He had quite a shock when he found out that little sable brush was a $52 sable brush. But he bought it.

One day liquor license policy

Those applicants looking for a one-day liquor license must have the application filed in the Selectmen's office two weeks before the meeting at which the applicants liquor license application will be heard by selectmen. The applicant must state on the application when the liquor for the event will arrive on the premises and when it will be removed from the premises after the event.

No portable johns

A resident of Forest Avenue (wherever houses are now under construction) complained to the health agent construction workers were urinating on the neighbor's private property.

The resident asked that the board require portable toilets at any building site.

Board members decided they would not require the johns.

Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos instructed the residents offenders should be told not to continue the practice.

Eliopoulos has also informed the developers, Crossen and Lanata, of her concerns.

Septic system appraised

The Board of Health and Zoning Board of Appeals held a recent joint meeting and as a result a Hobart Lane lot sepic system received the health board green light.

The two boards have been jousting as to which board should make a decision first on granting a permit for construction of a proposed house on Hobart Lane on the oceanfront.

Proponent sellers, members of the Chapin family, and buyers, Retta and John Dwyer, attended.

After a lengthy technical discussion, Health Board members Barbara Kern and Michael Bliss voted to accept the septic system plan, after the Zoning Board of Appeals grants a special permit.

Kern and Bliss said the system met requirements, and was not prohibited under present health board regulations.

Chairman Marilyn Sweeney opposed the applications because "if the system floods out in the future, the problem will be deemed a public health issue, and it will be a problem of the Board of Health."

After walling the site, Sweeney said she was not convinced the system would never flood out in a storm.

The office is located at 16 Highland Avenue.

The following services are available: blood pressure screening, urine testing, weights, TB testing and general health consultation.

SENIOR SHUTTLE BUS MALL TRIPS

The trips are: July 11, Braintree Mall (reservations taken July 5); July 20 to Hanover Mall; Aug. 3 to Hanover Mall; and Aug. 8 to Braintree Mall.

Reservations may be made one week prior for the trip to the Social Service League office, 383-0821.

Constable appointed

Selectmen appointed James Curley shellfish constable following John Winter's resignation of March 1983. He will receive $100 annually. Harbormaster Harry Ritter was appointed assistant shellfish constable, with no pay.

Cable TV license

Selectmen approved a provisional license for American Cablesystems last week, pending approval of town council.

MDC won't grant extension

State Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray said Tuesday the MDC has apparently reneged on a Friday agreement which gave Cohasset a 30-day extension to dispose septage into the MDC facility in Hingham.

Murray said she received a message in her Cohasset home Friday which gave Cohasset the go-ahead. ButTuesday the MDC Sewer Chief told Murray the agreement was never reached.

As a result septage trucks from Cohasset, Hanover and Norwell were not able to deposit septage at the MDC facility Tuesday.

The sign at the facility said, "No sludge from Norwell, Cohasset and Hanover."

Murray said late Tuesday she was trying to work out something with Hull but wasn't sure if any agreement was going to be reached.

Noel Barrata, director and chief engineer of the MDC's Sewer Division said Tuesday the MDC does not plan to grant any extensions of their ban against septage from Norwell, Cohasset and Hanover.

He said contrary to a story in last week's Patriot Ledger the MDC did not issue a one month extension to Cohasset to continue dumping septage into the MDC system via Hingham's nightsoil plant and would not do so unless an emergency was declared by the state Dept of Environmental Quality Engineering. He said DEQE has not declared such an emergency.

Friday, state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray received permission from MDC Commissioner William Geary to allow Cohasset to continue dumping setage into the MDC lines for 30 days.

Murray said her legislative aide Nancy O'Toole worked "night and day" to get the matter resolved.

After a week of meetings and negotiations, Cohasset received a reprieve. The MDC informed the town it would no longer be able to dump the septage into the Hingham facility. According to the commission, Cohasset, Norwell and Hanover do not have the proper permits needed to dispose of the refuse.

At last week's selectmen meeting, board members searched for answers to the complicated dilemma. An agreement was reached late last week in which Cohasset would treat its septage at the Hull facility and in return accept Hull sludge into the Cohasset landfill.

But tests conducted last week showed Hull's sludge material contained high levels of possible toxic metals such as lead and zinc. Selectmen said last week no treated sewage from Hull would be accepted into the Cohasset landfill until further tests were conducted to determine if the materials posed a health hazard.

Ann Pompeo, a Forest Avenue resident complained to selectmen last week about the possibility of contaminating the well water in that neighborhood located in the vacinity of the landfill.

In an attempt to delay a pending disaster, selectmen voted to request that the MDC accept Cohasset's septage until an alternative acceptable site is found.

Cohasset must continue negotiations with Hull to work out an agreement within the next 30 days.

The Hull Sewer Commission voted late last week to approve the acceptance of Cohasset's sewage on a day-to-day basis. The Cohasset Board of Health agreed to that arrangement Thursday and accepted the plan after determining that dumping Hull's sewage at the landfill will not contaminate the water wells on Forest Avenue.

State environmental engineer William St. Hilaire told the health board that industrial waste found in Hull's sewage was no danger to the public health.

SS Art Center 'Festival' winners

Christus Murphy — a painter who gave up painting for 17 years only to return to his first love five years ago — has won the "Best of Show" award at the 28th annual South Shore Arts Festival Juried Art Show.

His piece, "John Adams Visits Velazquez's Room on Charles St.," one of a series centered around the figure of one John Adams, was selected by a panel of jurors from 178 works as the Best of Show. The award was given by the Gunn Associataes, a Boston-based graphics firm, together with the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset, sponsor of the summer festival.

Prizes were also awarded in five categories — painting, watercolor, drawing, graphics and sculpture. In painting, the first prize, awarded by Cohasset Savings Bank, went to Elizabeth L. Burke for her piece "Nancy Clown;" and honorable mentions went to David Brega for "May Blossoms," Rosalind Farbush for "Brockton Landscape," Kevin Garrity for "Memory of St. Pete," Thompson Hughes for "Little Harbor Series," and Claffy Williams for "Sun Dial."

In watercolor, the first prize, awarded by Pilgrim Co-operative Bank, was given to Michael Compton for his piece "Manuscripts;" and honorable mentions went to Tom McLaughlin for "Where the Elite Meet" and to Gail Waechter for "Scituate Dump." John Wike's "Hay Bales" won the first prize in drawing awarded by Angelo's Supermarkets; honorable mentions went to Lisbeth Koopman Wyman for "Matt" and David Lehr for "Dancin'."

In graphics the first prize went to Wilfred Loring for "State of Collapse," and honorable mentions went to Joan Appel for "Strange Planet" and to Berj Kailian for "Dvin." Dennis Kowal won the first prize in sculpture for his piece "American Ikon #5" and the honorable mention went to Robert A. St. Pierre for his piece "#254 Bubinga."

Murphy's piece as described by the jurors "was definitely top notch, of international quality." This piece as with most of his work attempts to give visual form and structure to what he feels.

"I am trying to create a visual language to express among other things my emotions which are not visual," he said in describing how he perceives his work, "a language that cannot be spoken by rendering visual reality because it does not find its inspiration in the visual."

In his John Adams series, he uses the central figure of Adams as a vehicle to say anything "I want to say." For instance, the piece "John Adams Gets Loose in My Studio" tells something of the frustrations of an artist.

The piece in the juried exhibit, "John Adams Visits Velazquez's Studio on Charles St." expresses a time in the artist's life when he was living alone in an apartment on Charles Street. Murphy has based this work on Velazquez's painting "Temptation of St. Thomas Aquinas," except John Adams replaces St. Thomas.

Murphy's painting career goes back to 1953 when he studied with Lawrence Kupferman, Patrick Gavin and Otis Philbrick in the drawing and painting department of the Mass. College of Art. After earning his BFA he spent the next seven years painting, working as a freelance illustrator and teaching. He took some time off to paint and travel throughout Italy and Spain and culminated his trip with a successful show of his work at the State Gallery in Las Palmas.

Following his return to the U.S., he gave up painting in spite of his successes because as he explains, "it was a time of absolute artistic frustration for me."

For the next 17 years he pursued a career as a full-time illustrator and account executive wih an advertising agency. Five years ago he returned to painting and this last year he has started exhibiting again with a show at Marvin-Leonard on Newbury Street, his prize-winning work at the South Shore Arts Festival and a group show at the Loading Dock Gallery in the South End.

He credits the work of such masters as Velazquez and John Singer Sargent and their painting techniques for having brought more fluidity to his canvases. Back in the 1950s abstract expressionism — so prominent during that time — had a strong influence on his work but now "I want my paintings to have the quality of fluidity captured, containing the vitality that is so unique to oil painting."

A new review of the Continental Congress

By Claire McDonough

The following is an excerpt from a diary discovered in an old trunk in an area of Philadelphia scheduled for urban renewal.

JULY 2, 1776

Boy, am I nervous. The Continental Congress has been debating the issue of Independency for ages and they're going to vote in two days. Things look pretty iffy. John Hancock's wife says she doesn't even want him hanging around with hotheads like Sam Adams and me, and Paul Revere's wife told him that from now on she doesn't care who's coming, she needs the horse every Wednesday. The news from the front isn't too great, either. The army hasn't been paid, some prankster carved grafitti on General Washington's teeth, and according to a usually reliable source, Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton just can't seem to get along. What's a Patriot to do?

Ran into Johnny Adams and Ben Franklin at the Bunch of Grapes Tavern, and told them I was bummed. Asked them why we can't go for a simple majority vote instead of holding out for unanimity, and as usual, Franklin got silly.

"If we don't hang together," he giggled, "we will assuredly hang separately."

The guy really thinks he's a comedian.

I told him, "Look, there's a war on. We have to justify what we're doing here. Sometimes during a war you have to take extreme measures."

Adams got esoteric as usual. "I study war," he said, "so that my children may study politics and so that their children may study poetry."

Sometimes I swear I don't understand a word that man says. He did have some practical suggestions, though.

He told me, "Look, Tom, you wrote a darn fine Declaration. When debate in Congress reopens, you just have to be prepared to answer the objections they throw at you."

"For example?"

"Well, they're sure to say that you're proposing a treasonous act against the King."

"Tell me something I don't know," I groaned. "How do I answer?"

"Well," he suggested, "beat them to it. Change your opening to, 'When in the Course of Human Events it becomes necessary for one People to dissolve the Political Bonds which have connected them with another, and to assume among the Powers of the Earth, the separate and equal Station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent Respect to the Opinions of Mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the Separation.' "

That sounded great to me. I asked Franklin if he agreed, but he was up to his old tricks again, looking at the serving wenches in the tavern, so I turned back to Adams.

"That's great, Johnny, but they'll still say we're traitors."

"But that's not how they'll put it," he told me. "They'll say that King George hasn't given us the right to seize our liberty."

"Hey, terrific! I can tell them it's self evident that the Creator has endowed man with certain unalienable Rights; that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness. If the Rights come from the Creator, it's not up to the King to decide whether to give them to us or not."

Adams smiled. "You're getting the idea. Let's go over this list of other questions they're going to ask you."

"O.K. But how do you know what their objections are?"

"Let's just say I have a mole on the other side." He patted a scroll he had under his arm. "This baby happens to be the Tory Briefing Parchment."

It's going to be a happy Fourth of July or my name isn't Thomas Jefferson.

LET HOUSE CUT TAX BILL

Your home should be, besides your nest of dreams, an income tax saver. From the moment you take title to the day you turn over the key to the next inhabitants, you are endowed with opportunities to minimize your tax bill.

While you own the home, your two major annual deductions are property taxes and the interest on the mortgage. These can be considerable deductions.

Keep in mind that it doesn't matter whether you pay property taxes directly or through an escrow account held by the bank. In either case, you deduct the sum actually paid to the local taxing authority.

Also, using part of your home for business purposes constitutes a deduction for that portion of the home expenses used for the business. It is based on the square footage of space used for business. However, it must be used exclusively for business.

S.S. Science Center sponsors summer garden tour

Sponsored by the South Shore Natural Science Center, Norwell, six gardens on the South Shore will be on display Thursday, July 14 from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. (rain date, July 15). The tour travels the garden road through Hingham, Scituate and Norwell.

In Hingham, an historic home on Main Street, built in 1810, features formal beds of brilliant-colored annuals and perennials. A hilltop rose garden delights the senses. On Mast Hill Road at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Loomis, a garden planted on a small hill immediately draws the eyes. Lovingly worked on ever since building their home, the garden mixes various types of sedum, shrubs and bright flashes of flowers. Look for the miniature lily pond and be sure to observe the variegated leaf dogwood.

In Scituate, old stone walls are part of the lovely farm belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Crosbie. Stately trees, a pool surrounded by shrubs and flowers and a colorful lily pond tucked into a shady nook add to the beauty. Beds of herbs are everywhere - some planted with just herbs for teas or for culinary purposes. The fragrances of many different mints tantalize the senses. An extensive vegetable garden features rows of popcorn planted by grandson, Jason.

In Norwell, the garden road leads to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Rollin Bailey. Here, raised vegetable beds make gardening easier and more fun. Much of it is planned on the theory that things which combine well in cooking are friends in the garden. This garden is a true potpourri of vegetables, fruits and flowering borders. On Chittenden Lane a miniature garden, complete with bonsai tree, shrubs and flowers surround a small patio. A delightful statue of frolicking otter adds a touch of whimsy to this lovely spot. Twin gardens are found at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Rasmussen. One contains flowers bright with zinnia, sweet william and veronica; the other, a picture-perfect vegetable garden with neat rows, including broccoli and celery, are a gardener's dream. A large raspberry patch watches over them from behind.

Advanced sale ticket price is $5; day of tour $6. Tickets may be picked up at the Science Center on Jacobs Lane in Norwell. Tickets will also be available at the gardens on day of tour. For information, call 659-2559.

STARGAZING

On Friday, July 15 from 8 to 10 p.m., the South Shore Astro Society will present July Summer Night Sky at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell. Learn to recognize summer constellations, observe planets, discover secrets of the black holes, nebule and meteors. Indoor slide orientation and outside telescope viewing. Fee: $2 members; $3 non-members; $1 child under 14. Call 659-2559 for further information.

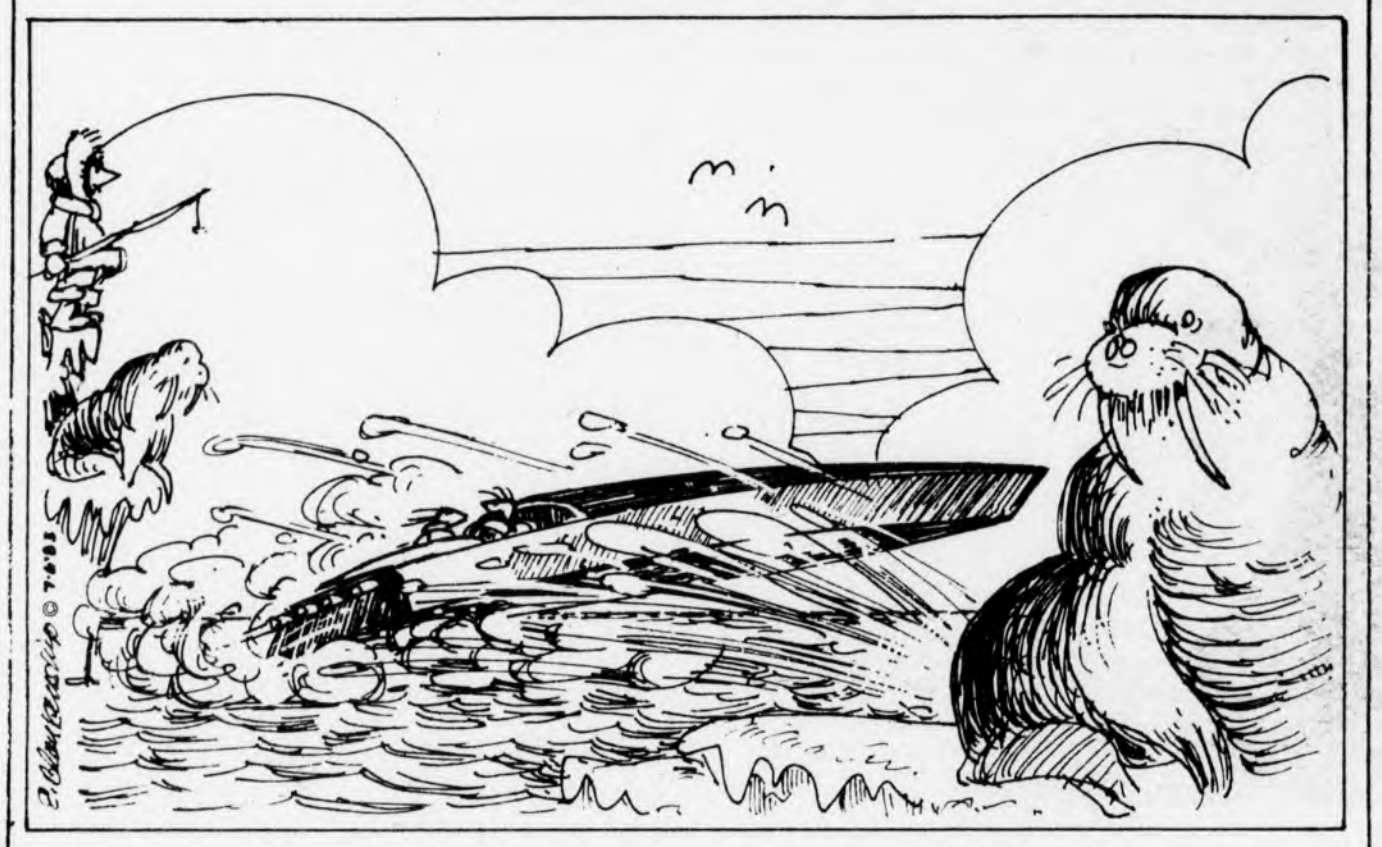
Alcoholism Center starts second decade

June 8 marked the 10th anniversary of the founding of the Alcoholism Intervention Center at Catholic Charities of the Old Colony Area, headquartered in Brockton.

1973 was the year when alcoholism began to be treated as a sickness instead of a crime, and on June 8, 1973 the first patient was admitted to the new detoxification center established by Catholic Charities in the Phaneuf Center, North Main St., Brockton.

The agency's director of alcoholism services, John O'Rourke, says, "The founding of the Intervention Center was an inspiring story of cooperation between the area's general hospitals, the Police Department and Catholic Charities. They all worked together to address an important community issue, and the results over a 10 year period are impressive."



When public drunkenness was a crime, prior to July 1, 1973, many chronic drinkers lived a cycle of endless drinking bouts followed by drying-out periods as criminals in jail. The Comprehensive Alcoholism Act changed that, and recognized alcoholism as a disease to be treated as opposed to a crime to be punished.

1973 news stories noted that the first step in rehabilitation from alcoholism was the three to four day detoxification process, but that other facilities were needed.

Catholic Charities of the Old Colony Area is nonprofit and nonsectarian, serves some 24 communities from its Brockton headquarters and satellite offices in Plymouth and Quincy, and provides a wide variety of social services for all kinds of people in need.

For information on any aspect of alcohol abuse and misuse, contact the Alcohol Intervention Center at 686 No. Main Street, Brockton. Phone: 587:0815.

Wishes granted to terminally ill children

Ida McCarthy

By Lois Martin

Ida McCarthy of Marshfield has three healthy girls. And maybe with that fortunate fact in mind Ida was touched by a relatively new organization that does something special for children who are very ill.

Several months ago she watched a segment on Channel 4's "Evening Magazine" about the New England Children's Happiness Foundation, Inc. Diane Lewey of Salem is the founder of the three year old charity.

Ida called her and started the South Shore chapter of the group. The goal is to grant wishes to chronically or terminally ill chidren who live in New England and are between four and 18 years old. The only other stipulation is a doctor's recommendation for the foundation's attention.

Thus far 35 wishes have been granted to the sick children. Most of those, said Ida, are a trip to Disney World. But other children have asked for a trip to the Grand Canyon or the shrine in Quebec.

Now the South Shore chapter has received its first official request. It's from a six year old in Quincy with a rare blood disease. The youngster also has leg problems but the blood situation makes an operation impossible.

The boy has asked for a car to assist his family in getting him back and forth to the hospital. They used to have one, said McCarthy, but there's no car now.

The child's name will go on a waiting list. The foundation puts all New England requests on a list and deals from the top. Each request is screened by the governing board of the foundation. And this new one, first from the South Shore, will be fourth on the list.

The family has been taking the youngster to the hospital on the T.

Next week, Wednesday, July 13 at 1 there'll be a fashion show at Bridgwaye Inn to benefit the foundation. The South Shore chapter has a strong nucleus membership but all people are encouraged to participate in the foundation, whether through donation of time or other gifts.

The headquarters of the New England Happiness Foundation, Inc. on the South Shore is in the home of Eugene and Ida McCarthy, phone number 834-4039. The mailing address is P.O. Box 694, Marshfield 02050.

In the future Mrs. McCarthy will update readers as to whether or not the little Quincy lad has received his wish, an unusual one, for a car to take him back and forth to the hospital.

Scituate historical tour Sunday

Sunday, July 10 viewers have the opportunity to study Scituate history.

The Scituate Historical Society will open all six historical sites from 1 to 5 p.m.

The sites are the Old Oaken Bucket Homestead, the Mann Farmhouse and Historical Museum, the Stockbridge Mill, the Cudworth House, Lawson Tower and the Old Scituate Lighthouse and Keeper's Cottage.

On Old Oaken Bucket Road at the intersection of Rte. 3A and 123, viewers can visit the Samuel Woodworth Museum which holds the memorabilia of the poet who wrote "The Old Oaken Bucket."

This museum opened last week and is in the John Northey house built in 1675 on the property of the Old Oaken Bucket Homestead.

This building has been restored and the steps of this restoration can be followed through a visual presentation. Anyone interested in old restorations will enjoy this.

A very short distance away on Greenbush Pond is the mill Woodworth referred to in his poem. The Stockbridge Mill 1640 is the oldest water driven grist mill in America and is still grinding corn into cornmeal and will be grinding corn on Sunday afternoon on the half-hour from 2 to 4 p.m.

Further on, toward the town itself on Greenfield Lane is the Mann Farmhouse and Historical Museum. This museum is related to the Spanish Treasure of Scituate and the Pirate Holmes who was tried and hung in Boston.

The Mann family's property and the Spanish Treasure are intertwined in the story. The hostess at the Mann House will tell the complete tale. This house was inhabited by many generations of one family — the Manns.

At the Cudworth House viewers can travel back into the days of the forefathers and see a beautiful home of the 1700's just across the street from the most impressive water tower anywhere — the Lawson Tower.

A climb to the top repays you with a wonderful view of the whole area, plus the opportunity to see and hear the chimes which play on important occasions in Scituate.

Turning toward Scituate Harbor, viewers can follow the shoreline to Lighthouse Point and the Old Scituate Light — still the guardian of the mouth of the town.

Viewers may visit the Keeper's cottage, see the official documents of the Lighthouse's story and climb the Light — a favorite with children of all ages.

A mourning Albuquerque buries Maxie Anderson

By Lois Martin

Albuquerque, N.M.—"Some folks live a lifetime and never live any kind of life . . . "

Those words, once spoken by Maxie Anderson to a friend, were repeated at his funeral Saturday at St. Timothy's Lutheran Church in Albuquerque as 1200 people reluctantly laid the famed aeronaut to rest.

Maxie and Don Ida of Colorado died in the Gordon Bennett International Balloon Race June 27 in West Germany, short of the East German border. Details of the fatal flight have not been confirmed. But the flaw is still believed to have been a misfiring of a device that separated the gondola from the balloon. The ultimate result of the undefined problem was that Maxie and Don fell to their deaths in the gondola.

Maxie's death left his family, his close friends and his countless admirers bereft of consolation. While the adventurer/businessman/promising politician had skirted death in countless flights, his dying had nonetheless shocked the world.

The bodies of the two men had been flown to O'Hare Airport in Chicago and then to their hometowns Friday, where thousands waited to pay homage.

Maxie Anderson was considering running for the Republican nomination for Governor in 1986. His acumen was not limited to ballooning. Indeed his firm, Ranchers Explorations & Development Corp. is one of the few New Mexico companies to be listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Those who spoke for him Saturday represented ballooning, business, philanthropies, politics and faith. Maxie Anderson was a man of many facets, who brought verve and vision to the objects of his energy.

His funeral service was a simple one, given to finding comfort through the faith that Maxie used in his fullbodied lifestyle.

Four men, friends and colleagues, eulogized the balloonist. One, Jim Mitchell his press spokesman during record-setting and attempting flights, said that Maxie told him after the flight from Marshfield to Iceland in 1977 that he'd learned he was not afraid to die.

And Maxie Anderson was not afraid to live. In fact that was the message of those who spoke during the private and public ceremonies. Maxie Anderson made choices that would result not in a long life but a full one. He would have been 50 years old in September.

The church service was girded with the Protestant hymns which suggested Maxie's faith and his source of personal strength: "God of Our Fathers, whose almighty hand; Leads forth in beauty all the starry band; Of shining worlds in splendor through the skies; Our grateful songs before your throne arise.'

The family and friends of the fallen aeronaut, accompanied by Don Ida's widow and daughter, Mae and Lynn Ida of Colorado, stood by as Maxie Anderson was interred in the sunlit cemetery. That ceremony was concluded by the playing of "Taps" by a student from the Missouri Military Academy of which Maxie was a graduate. That, said some, was more than they could bear.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE

But nobody speaks like the people. And that was the case when hundreds of people gathered at Albuquerque's Civic Plaza to honor the man called "hero."

Officials were there, too. Governor Tony Anaya. So were Maxie's friends—U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici, U.S. Rep. Manuel Lujan and State Sen. Thomas Rutherford, himself a pronounced balloonist.

It was the Mayor, Harry Kinney, who led the memorial program. They spoke of Maxie's death, that he died loving what he was doing, that he had lived, loving life itself and sharing that bounty with the millions who came to know his name.

The plaza was brilliant with the relentless Albuquerque sunshine. And those who'd massed to pay silent respect, stood by the half mast flags and the mounted policeman.

Their presence bespoke Maxie best. Some of them knew him personally. Few would have known Maxie impersonally because he was a gracious, engaging man.

One man, a teacher at the University of New Mexico, was telling the Congresman how when his funding was cut short, it was Maxie Anderson "who just kept sending big checks for the science fair."

Another woman, walking away from the service and wiping tears, said she had met him once and only knew .

"He was a fine man."

Gene Ives sang at the public ceremony, starting with "The Lord's Prayer . . . " and concluding the program with "The Impossible Dream."

St. Joseph's Hospital has been a particular charity that both Maxie and his wife Patty have supported with money, time and energy. In 1984 a wing of the new portion of the Hospital will be named for Maxie Anderson.

His friend, U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici (R-N.M.) candidly told the people he didn't feel like talking. "If I didn't have a lot of faith, this would be an utterly rotten day," he said.

The devastation wrought by the man's death was a shadow over Albuquerque Saturday. The loss was greater than that of a man, it seemed. Those who knew Maxie suffered a great sacrifice in losing a leader, someone who found or created joy in living that is not always apparent to those who did not share his excitement.

Maxie had, in some ways, made himself and success immortal. Awareness of mortality of one who was larger than life makes others more vulnerable. People felt the quality of their own lives was diminished with this loss of his.

At the funeral home that morning, a day exercised with grief, people stopped by to pay respects and to pass by Maxie Anderson as he lay in state. Expressions of inconsolable sorrow filled the room, save for one man among the mourners. That was Carl Anderson, Maxie's father, who paused by his son and adjusted a lock of his hair.

Whatever Maxie Anderson might have been had he lived longer, Governor, first man to fly around the world in a balloon, grandfather, he was more in his 49 years than many could hope to be.

. . . A man who made the most of his life and enriched the world in the process. For most of us, that is the impossible dream.

'What my Flag Means to Me'

(Editor's note: Danielle Doherty, 10, daughter of Ted and Lynn Doherty of 175 Riverside Drive, Norwell, recently won a $50 savings bond from the Hanover Elks when her essay, "What My Flag Means to Me," was chosen out of more than 200 entries in the annual essay contest. The Sparrell School fourth grader's essay was submitted, along with all those written by her classmates, by teacher Susan Ritchie. The contest was open to all students from Grade 3 to 6. Danielle's prize-winning essay follows.)

What My Flag Means To Me

By Danielle Doherty

My flag means a lot to me. It means freedom throughout our country. We also have our rights such as voting, women's rights, and a lot of others. In my country you get a fair trial and in some other countries you don't.

My flag represents the 50 states, our nation, and it represents me. My flag is beautiful. My country is beautiful, too. My flag is very important. This country is my home and I will never leave it. This flag represents my one and only country and I will never want a different one.

The flag stands for many different things, such as the stars stand for the states and the stripes stand for the original colonies. My country is a beautiful part of the world and so is the flag. I am very proud of it.

Danielle Doherty, 10, received a $50 savings bond for her essay. She's a fourth grader.

The brides meet for fun lunch sans bridegrooms

By Judy Enright

The bride wore white, white, white and white, but there wasn't one bridegroom in sight.

No matter, said the four ladies who lunched in full bridal attire recently at The Barnside restaurant in Hanover. They were already married anyway and decided to wear their wedding ensembles to lunch "because it's a shame not to get more than one wearing out of an expensive dress," bride Suzanne English of Norwell said.

The arrival of four brides in a red Bronco was met with a mixture of interest and surprise. As they stood outside posing for Mariner photographer Greg Derr, famed ex-Red Sox pitcher Jim Lonborg exited from the restaurant. "Pretty brides," he remarked as he walked past the group.

Two of the four wore veils. "Are they married to each other," a puzzled Barnside waitress asked? The outing was explained and management soon delivered a complimentary bottle of champagne.

The brides, all in their early 30's, included English, Joy Turpie and Brenda Clinton of Hingham and Heather Smith-Langfoss of Plymouth. They were accompanied by Marion Brewer of Weymouth who was dressed as a bridesmaid. All are teachers in the Hingham public schools except Heather who teaches fourth grade at Governor Winslow School in Marshfield.

The idea for the recent bridal luncheon was born at Heather's wedding last July 24. "We were talking about something fun to do to end the teaching year," Suzanne said. "We wanted to find something that would kick-off the summer."

The original idea was to involve eight brides, but four decided not to come, including one who is six-months pregnant. Asked where the others were, Suzanne joked "you really find out who your friends are."

All wore their original bridal gowns except Brenda who found that hers had turned brown in the 10 years since her wedding. "I was told it would cost $40 to clean it," she said, "so I put it in the washing machine on gentle cycle and it came out in pieces." Not stymied by that small problem, she borrowed a white prom gown from her niece, Marlene Clinton of Hanover, and looked for all the world like a bride.

Brenda just returned from maternity leave for her daughter, Kelle, who was 3 on July 5. She is now assigned to Hingham's South School but met the rest of the group when she taught at Plymouth River School in Hingham where Suzanne, Joy and Marion are now assigned.

When she left her home, Brenda said, her husband commented "happy anniversary." Suzanne said her husband "thought we were crazy."

Joy, a bride 17 years ago, wore her wedding dress but without the original shoes. "I guess they'd been in the kids dress-up box too long," she said. "They were gone when I went to find them." She has two children, Scott, 14, and Sandra, 12, "who thinks Mom's crazy," she said. Her husband asked where they were going to lunch "so he wouldn't bump into us." she said, laughing. Joy said she left the train for her gown at home on the advice of her children "who said it was too much."

Joining the party were several other teachers and friends. Mary Alice Harrington, a fourth grade teacher at Plymouth River, wore the same dress she wore to Suzanne's summer wedding two years ago. Suzanne is the daughter of Paul and Priscilla Jevne of Norwell, and graduated from Norwell High School.

Also attending were Plymouth River teachers Nancy Johnson and Diane Fischer, both of Hingham, and Judy Snyder of Cohasset.

"We ended up having a great time," Suzanne said after the luncheon. "Many people gave us stunned looks. We drew a round of applause from one group of ladies who were having lunch."

The brides went into the Barnside balcony after lunch and threw their bouquets. Marion caught two and Diane and Nancy each caught one, Suzanne said.

Some members of the group have enjoyed other events together including tubing on the North River and skimming down the water slide in Paragon Park. As the brides left the Barnside thorugh the crowded front section, one group told them their idea was "wonderfully inventive," Suzanne said.

One can only speculate on what the group will devise as a "school's-out" activity for next summer.

These brides of a number of combined years ago gathered at the Barnside in Norwell to make merry use of their wedding dresses . . . one more time. (Congratulations on the fit, ladies).

Enjoy the great outdoors . . . without the bugs!

Make this the year you enjoy cool early morning breezes or the still of evening without annoying insects and other pests. Add a custom fabricated screen enclosure to your present home and enjoy summer living at its best.

LWV 23rd annual house tour

Tuesday, July 12 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., the Scituate League of Women Voters will sponsor its twenty-third annual House Tour. Five showpiece homes and a gracious garden will be open to tour goers. From 2 to 4 p.m., refreshments will be served at the Satuit Boat Club overlooking Scituate Harbor.

THE KETTER HOME

Built in 1902 by Thomas Lawson for his oldest daughter, "The Beeches" has been restored by Bill and Phyllis Ketter. Looking for a house that was "architecturally possible," Mrs. Ketter has made structural changes which complement the turn of the century origins of this stately home.

The foyer, living room, and dining room retain their original structure and are decorated to compliment the period of the home's construction. The sunporch has been converted to a den, and the kitchen as completely remodeled five years ago, but both rooms remain reflective of the era in which the home was built.

The highlight of the second floor is the master bedroom. The Ketters took down two walls to uncover one of the home's four fireplaces, provide space for a bath, and create an elegant and spacious suite.

THE BLAUNER HOME

Located on the top of a cliff with a spectacular view of both ocean and coastline the home of Bob and Joan Blauner has a fascinating history. Before the Coast Guard was founded, Captain Frederick Stanley built this house to watch for wrecks at sea. In times of storms, when multiple wrecks and beachings occurred, he sheltered the rescued crews in his home.

Built in 1826, this home begins with its magnificent location and adds architectural interest and charming decor. An accomplished crafter, Mrs. Blauner's talents are seen in the pillows, needlework, window treatments, folk art, and quilting in each of the home's eleven rooms. The result is warm and delightful; a home which reflects the owner's talents and Scandinavian heritage.

THE KING HOME

It has been suggested that sometime in the mid-1800s the lovely antique cape owned by Robin and Mary Lou King may have been transported by barge from the North Shore to its present location. Lovingly restored by the owners, the home's architecture features the traditional center chimney with three fireplaces.

The decorating blends chintzes and Laura Ashley prints with a British flair from the King's residency in England. The house itself is only part of the beauty here, however.

The stone porch and yard beyond with interesting plantings and several gardens, including a formal vegetable garden are truly wonderful surprises. Mrs. King describes this as "a happy home" and many varied elements brought together with a careful attention to detail make this home not only happy but delightful.

THE BABB HOME

The nine year old home of Charles and Alice Babb offers every feature a person could wish for. Set back beyond a manicured lawn with graceful plantings, each aspect of this home indicates the impeccable taste of the owners. On the first floor, the elegant living room and formal dining room reflect the owners' interest in the Orient, and the kitchen overlooks the multi-tiered deck and kidney-shaped swimming pool.

On another level of the house, the den, has a relaxed and rustic atmosphere—an interesting contrast to the more formal rooms below. Bedrooms which show the personalities and interests of the Babb daughters and an elegant master bedroom will provide additional decorating ideas for tourgoers.

THE McMANUS HOME

Immediately upon entering, the oceanfront home of Carol and Dennis McManus feels like a vacation retreat. Called the "upside down house," its main living area is upstairs with a panoramic view of the ocean. Wide pine floors and barnboard walls stretch toward the livingroom's cathedral ceiling complete with skylight.

Totally refurbished following the Blizzard of 1978, the feeling of openness has been enhanced by floor to ceiling glass doors leading to a deck with many large plants.

THE LOMBARD GARDEN

"An Olde English Garden" is how Mrs. Katharine Lombard describes the yard of her home on Clapp Road in Scituate's rural West End. Mrs. Lombard has spent 40 years carefully creating this lovely spot with over 700 plants to delight both gardeners and non-gardeners alike. Tourgoers will enjoy each corner of this garden from the curving perrenial border to the nearby garden pool to the small but efficient greenhouse. Visitors can relax on a bench by the shade garden before crossing the lawn to the vegetable garden, cutting garden and grape arbor.

Tour tickets are available at $5 from any League member or at the Gates stores in Scituate Harbor and North Scituate Village or the North River Packet in Greenbush. On the day of the tour, tickets will be available for $5.50 at the above stores, or at Lawson Common at the intersection of First Parish and Beaver Dam Roads. Children are not invited to participate in the tour.

Fast and fair. Thats what insurance claim service should be. I'm impressed with the consistently good comments we get about Homeowners claims with Middlesex and since, for dwelling in Hanover, they also have rates far lower than most companies, it makes life more pleasant for both you and me.

You can help speed up your property claim by getting together a description of the property, the place purchased, the cost (original and replacement), repair estimates and c;ircumstances of the loss.

We can help speed up your claim by reaching in a drawer full of Middlesex claim checks for small checks and filling it out for you - and hurrying along the bigger ones.

Obituary

Maj. Gen. Edward Francis Logan

A funeral Mass was celebrated Saturday in St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset, for Maj. Gen. Edward Francis Logan, 65, who died last Wednesday after a brief illness.

Gen. Logan was the fourth general in his family.

He was born in Brookline in 1917 and raised in Boston and Cohasset at the Logan family home, The Ridges, an estate since razed. Since 1976, Logan and his wife Polly, have lived on Hingham's Main Street.

He attended Portsmouth Abbey School, Rhode Island and Harvard College, where he graduated from in 1939. He earned an MBA from Harvard's Business School in 1947.

Mrs. Logan is a member of the Massachusetts delegation to the Republican National Convention and is executive director of the Republican Club of Massachusetts. Her husband was a life-long Democrat.

Logan began his military career in 1940 by enlisting as a private with the 101st Infantry of the National Guard.

He was named first lieutenant in March 1942 and promoted to captain in December of the same year.

Following graduation from the Command and General Staff School, he was assigned to the 26th Infantry Division and filled staff positions with military intelligence under Gen. George Patton. In August 1944 he was assigned to the European theatre. He was promoted to major in 1945.

In all, he totalled 33 years of National Guard duty and won many awards, including the Broze Star with Oak Leaf Cluster, the French Croix de Guerre and the Legion of Merit.

He was promoted to brigadier general of the National Guard in 1965. Former Gov. Francis Sargent named him commanding officer of the 26th Yankee Division of the National Guard in 1970. Gen. Logan retired from the post in 1973.

Two of Logan's uncles had also held command of the Yankee Division. Maj. Gen. Edward L. Logan, for whom Boston's Logan International Airport is named, commanded the Yankee Division in the 1920s. Another uncle, Brig. Gen. Francis Logan was assistant division commander of the Yankee Division during World War II.

A generation before, Logan's grandfather, Brig. Gen. Lawrence J. Logan, commanded the 9th Massachusetts Infantry in the Spanish-American War.

All four Logans, at one time, headed the 101st Infantry or its predecessor, the 9th Massachusetts, the "Fighting Ninth."

In civilian life, Logan was employed by ITT-Sheraton Corp. as a financial adviser. Previous to that, he was treasurer of the family-owned Boston Beer Co.

The general was a charter member of the Clover Club. He was also a member of the Harvard Clubs of Boston and Hingham and the Capitol Hill Club in Washington, D.C. He is a former president of the Association of the U.S. Army, the National Guard Association and served the Massachusetts Military Academy as president of the academic board.

Besides his wife, he leaves a son, Malcolm T. Logan of Portland, Me.; two daughters, Martha A. Logan of Boston, and Roberta Phippen of Washington, D.C., and several nieces and nephews.

In lieu of flowers, the family requests contributions be sent to "Sundry Gifts for Medical Oncology" at Massachusetts General Hospital or may be made to the Portsmouth Abbey School, Portsmouth, R.I.

Farmers Market features fresh harvest

The Hingham Farmers Market opened for the season in May this year, and was considered an unqualified success by the member growers, who farm in Hingham, Cohasset, Duxbury and other South Shore towns. Plants and herbs sold well, and fresh cut asparagus only lasted minutes.

The market, which is located in the Hingham station and Bus Depot parking lot off North Street, will be open on Wednesdays and Saturdays this year, from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m., or until sellers are sold out.

The Hingham Farmers Market, unlike many "Farmers Markets," specializes in fresh-picked locally grown vegetables and plants. The sellers in the market do not go to the Boston produce market and acquire the same produce that is sold in our local markets. They sell locally grown produce picked from their own gardens or sell produce from gardens in this area of Mass. Produce at the market is fresh, not delayed by shipping and storing.

The market originated with the concept that local gardeners would have excess produce in their gardens and would be able to sell it in their own area.

During the month of June, when locally grown produce starts to come into its own, the market has rhubarb, peas, strawberries and lettuce. Late in the month baby carrots, beets, swiss chard and early raspberries will be featured.

In July look for blueberries, onions, shallots, parsley, basil, green beans, zuchini and summer squash. Every one at this time will be looking for our first "own" tomatoes.

DIABETES

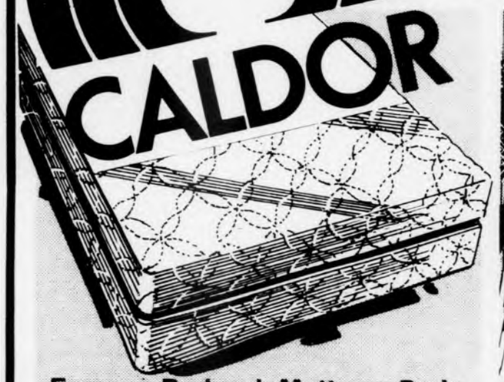
Diabetes is one of the most common diseases of the human metabolism, consisting of elevated glucose levels in the blood.

There are two variations of this disease. One is called juvenile-onset diabetes which develops during childhood and is characterized by a complete absence of the controlling hormone, insulin. Juvenile-onset diabetics initially complain to the pediatrician of tremendous thirst, increased urine production and weight loss; or go to the emergency room complaining of extreme sleepiness or weakness. The therapy of this condition requires control of the patient's diet and daily insulin injections.

The other variation, maturity-onset diabetes, occurs in middle aged individuals. Typically, these patients are overweight and suffer from tissue resistance to normal insulin levels. This imbalance results in high sugar levels in the blood. These patients improve with strict control of their diets and with significant weight loss. They can often be treated with oral medicines capable of lowering sugar levels in the blood.

The complications of prolonged diabetes involve the blood vessels throughout the body resulting in a decrease in the blood supply to many major organs. Recent work has shown that control of the glucose can arrest the progression of the complications.

As with other serious medical problems, a consistent ongoing doctor-patient relationship is necessary to tailor a regimen that is both effective and well tolerated by the patient.



Next Week, we'll discuss chest pains

Dr. Yankiver's office for the practice of internal medicine, kidney diseases, and hypertension is now open at 769 Plain Street (across from Ming Dynasty).

South Shore Basketball Camp takes the court

Area basketball coaches have teamed up to form the area's only basketball day camp for boys.

Paul Svensen of Scituate High and John LeVangie of Boston College High have formed the South Shore Basketball Camp which will debut July 11 for five days.

The two men have formed a staff including such people as Ed Amaral of Hanover High, Mike Donnell of Hingham, Ed Minelli of Cohasset, and Paul Wholey of Hull High. Togo Palazzi, the former Boston Celtic and longtime athletic staff member at Holy Cross, will be the guest lecturer.

Both camp directors have much experience in summer camp instruction.

The camp is open for boys in Grades 5-8.

"We have taken what we feel are the best things from all the camps we have worked in the past and incorporated them into the South Shore Basketball Camp," Svensen said.

"We have set out to keep the numbers of campers limited to 100 so we have strong individual groups. We don't want to have a mass produced kind of camp."

"We also want this to be a social experience for the boys as well as a place to develop and learn basketball skills. Because we are drawing basically from this area, many of these boys will be facing each other as they get older and this is a good place for the friendships to develop," he said.

LeVangie said the camp will be a good beginning for the youthful players.

"Each camper will be evaluated during the week and at the end of the session they will be given that evaluation with areas to continue to work on," LeVangie said. "We will have teams set up at the start of the week and with the numbers we will have on each team, every player should play at least three-quarters of a game. Because of the type of coaches we have on the staff, we feel these games and the instruction sessions will be fun as well as informative for the campers," he said.

The camp day will begin at 9 a.m. and end at 4 p.m. Lunch will be provided and a full time trainer will be on duty the entire week.

"Our goal is to offer a first class camp which stresses individual attention," Svensen said. "We have worked on this for over a year to make sure of every detail."

The Fourth lives up to its oldtime name in Hingham

By Judy Gilman

The glorious Fourth fully lived up to its name in Hingham Monday as crowds gathered to tuck in pancakes, race 4.8 miles, and watch a parade that included bands, floats , winning baseball teams and even a pig ("Makin' Bacon") and a wigwam.

And after the public events of the day, it was on to cool, shady yards of friends and relatives for a laxing day of barbecue and cool drinks and desultory talk on a scorching July 4.

The Kiwanis Club's pancake breakfast on the Common was a crowd-pleaser, with eager breakfasters still lining up at 9:30 to get a crack at pancakes made on three grills under shady trees at a corner of the Common. Everyone waited in line good-humoredly, no one wanting to rush in what was rapidly becoming a very hot day.

From the vantage point of the breakfast it was possible to watch two events, both the 4.8 mile road race sponsored by the Hingham Striders, and the annual parade, bigger and better than ever. Perhaps the smartest onlookers opted for a chair in the shade, while more eager spectators began to crowd into Hingham Square around the senior citizens' reviewing stand in front of the school administration building.

Brendon Potter of the Striders reported Tuesday that over 660 runners made their way to the race beginning at South Junior High, about the usual number for the race but unusual in view of the heat and humidity. The Rev. Robert Edson, rector of St. John the Evangelist, was a victim of the hot day. He collapsed on the race route and was taken by ambulance to South Shore Hospital where he was reported in good shape Tuesday by curate Richard Menees.

Despite the heat, visitor Sabina Horne of Canada shaved nearly two minutes' off the women's record time for the course, finishing 17th overall with a time of 25:42.

Other winners by category included:

10 and under boys: Josh Staunton (41:22), David Edson (43:06), Mark Roper (44:05);

10 and under girls: Katy Delay (40:34), Beth Hollin (46:14), Martha Riley (46:23 ;

11 to 15 boys: Kevin Taymor (25:48), Kevin White (27:05.2), Niall Hood (28:54);

11 to 15 girls: Ann Cullivan (34:14), Joan Riley (38:17), Claire Higgins (40:38);

16 to 19 men: John McGill (22:56.6 and third overall), Patrick Fitzgerald (23:54 and fourth overall), Chris McNabb (25:19);

16 to 19 women: Kthy Stoehr (26:53), Cindy Basler (30:30), Karen Berard (32:34);

20 to 29 men: Scott Peeler (22:31.5 and race winner), Richard Jordan (24:24.5), Kenneth Mercier (24:28.9);

20 to 29 women: Sabina Horne (25:42 and first woman finisher), Mary Ellen Rose (27:02.9 and second woman finisher), Mary Kate Donovan (29:06);

30 to 39 men: Gene Morris (22:42.2 and 2nd finisher), Chip Carey (24:36.9) Joseph Busa (25:09.8);

30 to 39 women: Sophie Bret-Morrill (29:23), Jan Buba (29:52), Leila Staunton (31:29);

40 to 49 men: Jerry Goldberg (26:27.1), David Campbell (27:12), Dick Mills (28:04.9);

40 to 49 women: Linda Crosby (35:43.7) and June Newman (37:42); there was no third-place finisher in this category;

men's master class, 50 and over: Frank Mullin (29:55), Ken Williams (30:22), James Costello (30:29);

women's master class, 50 and over: Jane Goodwin (36:43), Hilda Ledoux (45:44), Mary Ronon (49:59).

By 9:30 the anticipation was growing to such an extent in Hingham Square that one could almost taste the eagerness to see this year's production of Hingham's annual parade, this year in memory of David McNeice Jr., killed last summer in an MBTA accident while trying to save a fellow passenger. The crowds got thicker and the heat even more oppressive, when, all of a sudden, the word was passed--"They're coming"--and so they were.

Horses and antique automobiles, shoals of them included in each division of the parade, the Hingham Militia, parade marshal H. Francis Ford and his wife riding in style in the traditional horse-drawn buggy, the Hingham High band, complete with color guard and cheerleaders, the selectmen together with Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) and Moderator Thomas L. P. O'Donnell--the list went on and on.

The Colonial Pipers piped, a line of blazingly-shiny Corvettes added their own style to the parade, and the Hingham Mother's Club took the best in parade prize. The Camp Fire float was designated most beautiful and the Wompatuck Indian wigwam, most unique. The judges must have had some tough choices to make.

Without question the most energetic and entertaining demonstration put on in front of the reviewing stand was that of the Hull High School Marching Pirates who, despite temperatures in the 90s, scorching pavements and high-necked uniforms, put on a musical precision show that delighted the spectators and lasted nearly 15 minutes. They were perfection in unison and showed without question why they've won so many trophies in their existence.

There were more bands and corps. Alliance, who has become familiar in recent years, appeared in classy new uniforms and displayed their usual spit and polish, though not long enough to satisfy the spectators. Sancians of Weymouth has grown and improved since their appearance in last year's parade. And, on a softer note, the South Shore Conservatory's Kinderchor, under the banner of "Musical Stew," stopped to entertain in front of the reviewing stand as well.

And then it was over, and the crowds headed for home, loaded down with plastic animals on sticks and balloons and thirsty and hungry. Almost before the hordes departed, the highway department's street sweeper was in action, picking up the litter to make the 1983 Fourth of July parade just another memory.

Scituate 100 Classic speed boat race goes off course

By Cindi Bondi

If next year's powerboat race is held in Scituate, racers have requested this buoy marker.

"Wrong Way, Go Back, You Are Heading Toward Plymouth."

The July 2 Scituate 100 Classic speed boat race could be called "The Plymouth 200 revisited" because most boats missed the Scituate Harbor checkpoint and darted off to Plymouth where the race was held in past years.

"Gypsy Man," driven by Scituate's Dave Langer, won the race in the fastest class D, despite the weather delay and the sudden call to end the race early.

"Gypsy Man" blazed ahead leaving "Berry's Moova" in second place. "Outrageous," the boat precluded to win by many racing enthusiasts, was third as driver Larry Smith led the other 19 boats away from the first checkpoint and off-course to Plymouth.

"We had a short visit with the Pilgrims until we realized that we were off-course," said "Outrageous" throttleman Bill Frenz.

The boats returned to Scituate but only a few followed the race course. The course began at the mouth of the harbor toward N. Scituate to Humarock and back to the harbor. Halfway through the race, Commander Mark Yost, of the Scituate Coast Guard Cutter Cape Higgin and Coast Guard Chief William Rowland on Jack Conway's "Columbian," a race committee boat, fired flares after a simultaneous decision to stop the race.

"The race became unsafe when the speed boats were operating in unsafe areas. The spectator boats, which numbered at least two hundred, cooperated by staying in designated areas," said Rowland. "But, the navigators of the speed boats did not follow their course."

Dea Buckley, navigator of "Dea Won," said, "Missing the checkpoints was the navigators' fault. Some boats were going 80 miles per hour and heading toward Plymouth fishing fleets." There were no accidents. Most boats slowed down when they realized that they were off-course."

Marshfield's Chuck Noble, winning driver of "Anything Goes," said, "The checkpoint shouldn't make that much difference. Navigators should know the course. We could see the race buoys so we used them as markers to make the turn at the checkpoint."

Racers agreed the checkpoint boats were hard to see because their white flags blended in with the cloudy sky. "If it was any foggier no one would have made the first checkpoint. I've been racing for years and I've never had a problem spotting a flag because they are usually orange," said navigator Bill Dvorak of "Freeze Frame."

Foggy weather conditions worked against the racers. The race was scheduled for 1 p.m. and could not begin until 2 p.m. Boats patiently waited to enter the harbor until the Coast Guard declared the fog lifted enough to yield at least a two-mile visibility range.

The crew of "Outrageous" questioned why the race was cancelled in the Scituate 100 last weekend.

A soon as the fog cleared the sleek vivid orange, electric blue and other colored boats paraded into the harbor and circled to begin. "Gypsy Man" and "Anything Goes" managed three of the expected four laps before the race was cut short. Most boats tried to chart a new course but that action ended with many boats circling the committee boats in confusion.

However, the race committee named the winners of each class as though the race was completed and according to the scored position of the boat when the race was called.

Race committee member, Cindy Morse, also the navigator of "Outrageous," said, "It was too bad. Everything went smoothly until the missed checkpoint fiasco. The race committee felt that everyone had put so much effort into the race and that some did stay on course so the winners were still awarded."

All the winners received trophies. First place winners won $500, second place, $300, and third place, $200.

Following are the winners of the four different boat classes, which vary from Class A, the least powerful, to Class D, the most powerful:

A pace boat led the racers out of the harbor in choppy water during the Scituate 100.

CLASS D

Winner: "Gypsy Man," driver Dave Langer of Scituate.

Second place: "Berry's Moova," driver Carl Berry of Waltham.

Third place: "Outrageous," driver Larry Smith of Guilford, Conn.

CLASS C

Winner: "Special Edition," driver John D'elia of Greenwich, Conn.

Second place: "Dynamite," driver Larry Schiletto.

CLASS B

Winner: "Anything Goes," driver Chuck Noble of Marshfield.

Second Place: "Double Trouble," driver-navigator Doug and Brad Leary of Middleboro.

Third place: "Freeze Frame," driver Jeff Gerardi of New York.

CLASS A

Second place: "Super Boat," driver Aldo Alczlcvshi of New Jersey.

Third place: "Centerfold," driver Tony Averso of New Jersey.

Holding the race in Scituate required a lot of planning, but race planners are unclear if the race will be held in Scituate next year.

Head organizers of the race, Dick Morse, Allan Swiman and Dave Langer, all said that the Coast Guard, the Harbormaster, the Selectmen, the Chamber of Commerce and the fishermen worked hard to make this event possible. Also the National Power Boat Association (NPBA) and Race New England provided the safety measures to run the race. Under the NPBA tha boats were covered by insurance and they were inspected to meet Coast Guard Safety Equipment approval.

Mike Spirito, NPBA director and throttleman on "Little Dancer," said that success in speed boat racing is in the hours of mechanical preparation and the strategy of the race. Someone who invests a lot of money may be beaten by someone who is aware of weather conditions and other factors, he said.

This group of speed boats will continue in a national six race series. The next race will be at New London, Conn. sometime in mid-July and during the first week in August the boats will race in Saybrook, Conn.

New York Airedale terrier takes Best of Show

By Judy Gilman

They came in fluffy and wiry coats, tall and short, svelte as a whippet and round as an Old English sheepdog. And when the 988 dogs gathered at the Hingham High School playing fields for the South Shore Kennel Club's annual all-breed show had strutted their stuff in their respective rings, an Airedale was judged best of show.

Champion Accabonac Barvarosa came from New York to take the ultimate blue ribbon of the competition. Five years old, the Airedale terrier is an old hand at the winner's circle, as is owner Seton Shanely.

Between the opening round and the final winner's circle, there were innumerable classes, some in which the competition was fierce, others in which it was almost non-existent. That reflects the current fashions in dogs, which switches from year to year.

Seemingly endless lines of solemn Scotties, dignified in their crisp haircuts and black goatees, trotted around the ring while their all-white counterparts, West Highland Whites, watched outside the ring, waiting their turn. It was a tight battle to come up with a blue ribbon winner in this class. Each contestant watched the competitor currently in the spotlight being checked over on the examining table by the judge in the flowered dress and the large, shady hat. Tails up, heads alert, ears cocked forward, they were all primed for their individual moment in the spotlight under the judge's merciless scrutiny.

Another terrier class, Bedlingtons, were fielded entirely by a single breeder. Bedlingtons, with their pale gray tightly curled coats and their rounded noses, remind one of lambs. And their frolicking gait when they're let off the lead is bouncing and lamblike, as well.

An all-breed show such as this is, of course, the perfect place to look at breeds one hasn't seen before. And the owners and showers are only too happy to sing the praises of their particular friends of man.

The Hingham High playing fields were taken up with motor homes, station wagons, and shady enclosures made by throwing up miniature marquees for the competitors to rest in comfort under before their moment in the ring. In the center of the field was the main judging area, split down the middle with a striped tent with show rings on either side. Around and around the rings the exhibitors and their charges went at the judges' commands.

In many cases, the competitors had an easier day of it than their human counterparts. For breeders who lived nearby and who were scheduled to show in the morning, the easy and sensible route was to pack Fido off back home before coming back for the afternoon windup.

And then the final photographs were taken, the final cups and bowls and plates and ribbons awarded and, like magic, the city of dogs disappeared until next year and another show.

Showing dogs brings out the best in well-groomed pets

By Judy Gilman

Do the owners look like the dogs or vice versa? Why do breeders choose to work with a particular breed? And why do breeders and groomers spend the hours daily that it takes to keep a champion show dog at the peak of looks and conditioning?

It was interesting wandering among the portable cage/grooming table combinations of the grooming tent at the South Shore Kennel Club's all-breed show last Friday. Perhaps the most striking picture of the "pictures speak louder than words" category was that of a young woman painstakingly grooming a standard poodle. The poodle was being worked over inch by inch, almost hair by hair. The groomer, on the other hand, had her hair in curlers preparatory, no doubt, to the appearance in the ring. But the main attention was very definitely focused on the four-footed competitor, who stood patiently, not arguing with the quest for perfection.

These show dogs are groomed sometimes to the point where the casual observer might think the dog in question is another breed. Such is the case with cocker spaniels, a fairly common breed of endearing fluffy paws, floppy ears and enormous brown eyes.

The show model, though, has had the coat trimmed and shaped so that trotting produces a rippling effect, the stomach hair having been left long to reach the ground. The head is up, the tail reaches toward the sky and these several pounds of hair and style trot out into that show ring as though they own it.

Showing a dog is an athletic effort that shouldn't be downplayed. Perhaps one of the first things noticed is that not one female exhibitor is wearing anything but flat shoes. Dainty high heels are not the best footwear for running briskly around a ring--and brisk is the order of the day when it's a Great Dane that's on display.

To get a Great Dane into a presentable trot, which the judges want to observe in order to determine the animal's conformation, it requires a human full gallop. On a warm summer's day, a dog show is at least as much an athletic event for the exhibitor as for the dog.

What keeps a dog show from the level of the ridiculous is the competitors themselves, the four-footed ones. Watch a show dog wait his or her turn in the ring and you're watching a professional. Not jumpy or nervous, definitely taking an interest in what's going on around them, they exhibit very little in the way of poor manners with barking or growling.

It might be concluded after watching a number of classes that these are four-footed hams going out there to strut their stuff. And they almost visibly enjoy it. Can't you see the grin on the cocker's face that matches that of his exhibitor as the blue ribbon is handed out? Another one for the wall, Dad.

Animal officer appreciates classy dog show

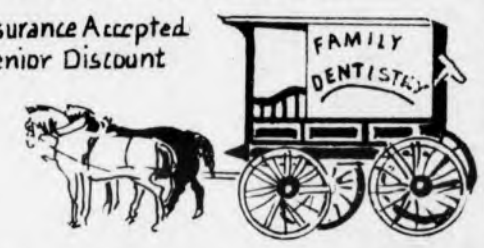
By Judy Gilman

For Hingham Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy, the annual South Shore Kennel Club's dog show here is one of his favorite assignments.

"You really see the cream of the crop here," he said Friday watching the passing scene of preliminary judging, while late arrivals trotted across the field, usually led by a competitor straining at the leash, and followed by a portable cage/grooming table being pulled on another leash. "People spend so much time and money on these animals. And they seem to have a really good time, too."

Unlike many animals Murphy is called upon to deal with in the course of a working day, these four-footed friends of man were well-behaved, eager to have their moment in the spotlight, and groomed within an inch of their lives. A flea? a tick? unheard of!

Murphy, of course, sees the flip side of animal owners all too often in the dog lover who wants to let his pet run free to the owner who neglects to have his dog properly inoculated. One dog Murphy recently picked up, a purebred, turned out to have distemper, one of the most deadly animal diseases and one that spreads rapidly. Quick action had to be taken at Shisone Kennels in Marshfield, where Hingham's truant dogs are lodged, to prevent a major outbreak.



Here on the high school playing fields, there are no dogs running loose, no barking complaints, not even any menace to walking. An active kennel club member equipped with long-handled pooper-scooper sees to that.

Beachside bonfires keep tradition algow

The bonfires along Sunrise Beach marked Marshfield's celebration of the holiday and a time-honored tradition for the night before the Fourth.

By Judith Denzer Cooper

Bonfires glowed along Marshfield's beaches on the night of July 3 as a tradition of more than 50 years was maintained. In spite of high tide and hot weather, problems were minimal and neither the Police nor Fire Department reported any major trouble.

The fires are technically illegal because the State will allow only one ceremonial fire permit for each community. With Marshfield's five miles of coastline, a limit of one fire would change the evening drastically.

An additional concern in recent years has been the proliferation of fireworks in the hands of individuals. Marshfield has no organized fireworks display on the 3rd, and many people standing on the beaches find random fireworks whizzing by in all directions.

This year may have brought the largest crowds in memory to the beach area. Police Chief Charles Chaplin estimated that as many as 50,000 people were in Marshfield for the Fourth of July weekend. This means approximately 30,000 people more than the town's regular population.

Selectman James Robinson spent the evening of July 3 with Chief Chaplin as he patrolled the Town. Robinson said they were on the road from 8 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. Chaplin was supervising a total of 22 police officers during the night.

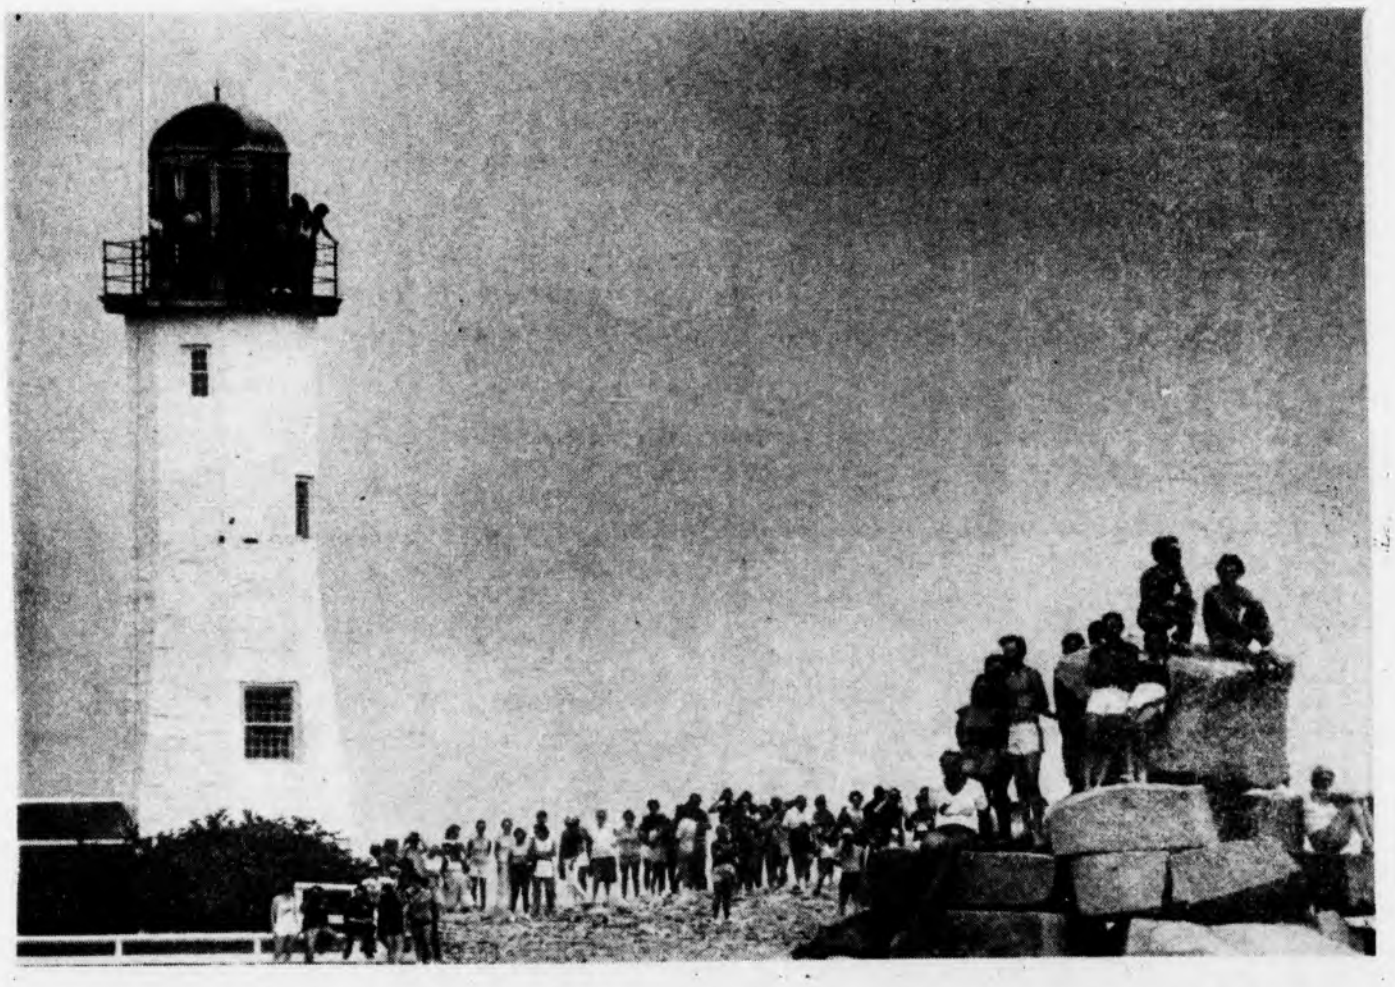
There are normally nine officers on duty from 8 p.m. to midnight. For this night there were 12 officers and 10 unpaid auxiliary police on duty. Robinson said, "Chaplin and the entire department did a magnificent job . . . some men worked 16 hours."

"Chaplin kept track of every cruiser and all of the men. It was as if he were working a giant chess game. As each area of town became quiet he moved the men to the place they were needed," said Robinson.

One danger that Chaplin feels must be addressed in plans for future years is pedestrian traffic. In Humarock and Rexhame people walk to the beaches to see fires. As they return home there are hundreds of cars trying to move down narrow roads. Chaplin told Robinson he fears the combination of walkers and fast cars will end in a tragedy.

A second unresolved problem is drinking on the beaches. Many of the peole who arrive for the day will not cooperate with the lifeguards. When people see someone else drinking they think it's all right for them and the situation gets out of hand.

Robinson says he will continue a campaign for fewer fires and more organized activities for the next year. He felt that this year showed improvement over last year. An example of this was people out cleaning the beaches the morning after the 3rd.



Fire Chief Fred Gibson had extra fire fighters on duty during the night of the bonfires. He also had a fire truck in each area of town and they patrolled during the night. Green Harbor, Rexhame and Humarock present traffic congestion problems for both police and fire vehicles. Gibson feels traffic control must also be improved.

In most parts of town the celebration is over by 11:30 at night. The fires are out and people go back to their homes. However, Foster Park (between 3rd and 5th Roads) is a place where those who do not have a place to stay congregate. At 12:30 a.m. the police cleared the area. Robinson said there were still people found sleeping on the beach the morning of July 4 but the police action reduced the noise and kept the activity from being serious trouble.

Selectman Sheila Gagnon has also expressed concern for the potential danger caused by the July 3 activities. She has suggested more organized programs rather than the uncontrolled bonfires and fireworks. "If people will just have respect for their fellow human beings the problem could be reduced," said Gagnon.

All of the involved town officials reflect that the Fourth of July puts tremendous stress on the community's resources. Even when everything goes well there is not a sense of accomplishment but rather a sigh of relief. A "good" year is one with only minor accidents and 30 arrests. "We made it through another Fourth of July without a tragedy" is not the best way to look at the weekend events.

The selectmen are determined to improve the situation with early plans for 1984. Their goal is to have people come to Marshfield for a great but safer Fourth of July celebration.

The Second Season of the Prelude Concert

The Second Season of the Prelude Concert series will continue Saturday, July 9, at the Scituate Town Library, Branch Street, with a performance by the Portland String Quartet, featuring Stephen Kecskemethy, violinist, Ronald Lantz, violinist, Julia Adams, violist and Paul Ross, cellist.

The program, which begins promptly at 8 p.m. in the Scituate Town Library, will feature works by Haydn, Piston and Schubert.

Since 1969, the Portland String Quartet has been steadily building an enthusiastic following wherever it has appeared — from the United States to Europe and South America. Celebrating their fifteenth anniversary together, the members of the Quartet have "set a record in this country," accoridng to Prelude's Artistic Director Barbara Lane. "It is very unusual for an ensemble like this to enjoy such longevity, with no 'turnover' in personnel."

The Portland String Quartet has received wide acclaim for its comprehensive lecture demonstrations at many college campuses as well as for its concert series.

It has developed a reputation for strong and unusual programming combining traditional masterpieces with contemporary works by established composers — for example, its premiers of the Schoenberg and Piston concerti for String Quartet and Orchestra.

The Portland String Quartet is in residence at the University of Southern Maine and maintains a rigorous performance schedule, touring privately and under the auspices of the State Department.

Funding for this performance has been provided in part by grants from the Scituate Arts Association and the New England Foundation for the Arts.

Tickets are $5 each and may be obtained in advance by calling Barbara Lane at 545-0238. They may also be purchased at the Scituate Arts Association Gallery, Front Street, Scituate Harbor, from July 1 through July 9, or at the door the evening of the performance.

Future concerts in the Second Season of Prelude will feature baroque violinist-conductor Jaap Schroeder, with harpsichordist Elaine Thornburgh in October, and The New York Cornet and Sacbut Ensemble in January, 1984.

The truth behind your seafood platter

Following are clarifications of the most common misunderstandings concerning seafood. Sue Faria of the Massachusetts Division of Marine Fisheries has provided the answers. Miss Faria directs the Commonwealth's Seafood Marketing Program whose goal is to increase the awareness, knowledge and use of Massachusetts seafoods.

What really is scrod?

Contrary to popular belief, scrod is not synonymous with a baby cod, not exclusively that is. Theoretically, scrod can be a small cod, haddock, pollock, hake or cusk, generally weighing 1½ to 2½ pounds when whole. Therefore, the term actually is a market size for members of the cod family, and not a particular fish species. Being closely related, these fish are similar in eating characteristics and my be substituted for each other in recipes. Generally, the scrod being sold in today's market place, whether retail or restaurant, is most often cod and haddock.

Should oysters only be eaten during the months whose name contains the letter "R"?

No. Oysters can be eaten any time of the year. Summer (the "non-r" months) is the spawning season for oysters. After spawning, oysters are temporarily less meaty and flavorful, but perfectly edible.

Is there a difference between flounder and sole?

Flounder and sole are biological classifications of flatfish according to body shape; the former is elliptically shaped and the latter, more rounded. Most of the so-called "soles" found in our markets are actually local varieties of flounder. There are no true sole commercially caught off the New England coast. However, the name "sole" has been assigned to come of our flounder species for marketing purposes. For example, witch flounder is given the more glamorous name of grey sole. The only true sole seen in local markets and restaurants is the Dover sole, which is imported from England.

How can I tell if it's fresh?

When purchasing fresh fillets and steaks, look for a clean cut appearance; the edges should not be ragged or frayed. The meat should be firm and moist with no drying or browning at the edges. When buying whole fish: look for clear, full eyes (not cloudy or sunken); shiny, unfaded skin; red or pink gills, free from slime; firm flesh (test by depressing flesh with your finger, the flesh should spring back to its original shape); and, if gutted, a clean body cavity. Above all, when buying any fresh fish, it should have a fresh, mild odor — not "fishy."

What am I eating when I eat a scallop?

Unlike clams, oysters, and mussels; scallops are not traditionally eaten whole in this country. The plump, marshmallow-shaped meat is actually the muscle which opens the two shells of the scallop.

What's the difference between sea, bay (Cape), and calico scallops?

One important difference is that sea and bay scallops are caught locally while calicos are harvested off of Southern Atlantic states, mainly Florida. Sea scallop meats average in size from one to two inches across and are available year-round. Local bay scallops are only in season October through March and have an average meat size of one-half to three-quarters of an inch. Calico scallops, also called southern bay or Florida bay scallops, are quite small, only one-quarter to one-half inch, and are available year-round. In retail markets, it is a law that all scallops be labeled as to their type and origin.

Is there really a shark that tastes like swordfish?

Mako shark meat is very similar to swordfish meat in appearance, taste, and texture; and as an added bonus, it usually retails for about half the price. At a small taste-test conducted by the Division of Marine Fisheries, 48 individuals tried a sample of baked mako shark and rated it. Only three of the participants disliked it. Now's the time to get back at "Jaws" — eat shark!

Is squid tough?

Squid, alias calamari, has a unique texture unlike most seafoods; however, it is generally not tough unless overcooked. Like all fish, prolonged heating tends to dry out and toughen the meat, but when cooked properly squid is quite tender. If frying bite-size pieces, cook for no more than 45 seconds at 375 degrees.

Littlenecks, cherrystones and chowders? Sounds like a clammy story!

All three are the same species of clam, our typical hard shell clam, the quahog. They are grouped according to size for marketing ease. Littlenecks are the smallest and most expensive, they are typically served raw on the half-shell or steamed. Cherrystones are medium-sized and used in many dishes, including clams casino. Chowders are the largest and least expensive. They are often minced or diced for use in chowders, stuffed clams and fritters.

If clams are gaping open, are they still alive?

Yes, as long as the shells come together after being handled. Test by tapping it on a countertop, if the animal is alive it will close its shells in response to the agitation. The same test applies to oysters and mussels.

What fish should not be eaten during local outbreaks of red tide?

Only filter-feeding shellfish which are eaten whole should not be consumed. These are clams, oysters and mussels. During periods of red tide, retailers obtain these shellfish from other regions so you don't have to go without. It is safe to eat scallops (the muscle meat), lobster and finfish harvested from affected areas.

What is Boston bluefish?

This is a name that was given to pollock many years ago for promotional purposes. Restauranteurs occasionally featuare pollock on their menus as Boston bluefish. However, this is not to be confused with the true bluefish which is a darker-fleshed fish occuring seasonally in our waters.

Hopefully these answers have cleared up some of the seafood confusion in your mind. The Commonwealth's Seafood Marketing Program serves as a consumer information center and is an excellent source for answers to your seafood questions. Just call them at (617) 727-3193, or write to the Division of Marine Fisheries, Seafood Marketing Program, 100 Cambridge Street, Boston, Mass. 02202.

Norwell Recreation Department summer registration

The Norwell Recreation Department is still accepting summer program registrations for all programs. Those interested should come to the Recreation Office in the Water Dept. Building, 365 South St. during office hours: Tuesdays through Thursdays, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Registrations will continue until programs are filled.

SUMMERFUN

For the first tinme, the Department has introduced a new program for those in Grades 7 to 12. The program, called "Summerfun," will be held at the High School Facility/fields and emphasizes sports and games for teams or individuals. Mornings 9 a.m. to about noon (depending on field trip schedule), the more active sports will be organized: for example, July 11-15, soccer, basketball and earthball (a 4-foot diameter ball); July 19-22 flag football, pillo polo & ultimate frisbee and it continues for each week—both old & new sports and games through August 19.

Afternoons the less active sports will be organized (in case weather stays hot): for example, July 11-14, tennis, softball and frisbee golf; July 18-22, volleyball, badminton, bocce and archery. Tournaments, contests, playing for fun and learning new games, are all part of this program. The fee schedule is $10 each week for mornings only, $6 each week for afternoons only or $15 each week for both. The fee will not include Summerfun Field Trips . . . nor will the Summerfun Sports and games operate if the Field Trips (mentioned below) go. The afternoon session will operate from about noon to 3 p.m.

FIELD TRIPS

The Summerfun Field Trips have been planned to meet the social needs of teens. All except the trips to Paragon Park/Nantasket Beach, are planned for Tuesdays and Thursdays (Hull is Friday). Some are mornings, some are afternoons and several are all-day. Each trip is supervised with a ratio of 1 staff for 10 youths. Staff are college age or older. Prices of trips range from $5 to $18.50 and include supervision, transportation, admission. Some of the first trips planned include: July 12, rollerskating from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. will be at Marshfield where we are renting the facility for our "party" only—so it is a good time to get your friends together for some uncrowded rollerskating space!

On Friday, July 15, we plan a trip to Paragon Park/Nantasket Beach. We will leave at 11 a.m. and return at 6 p.m. Participants may do the park/amusement/arcade activities and/or beach activities. On July 19, horseback riding is planned at Hingham's Turkey Hills Stables . . . with a trail ride on Turkey Hill, we leave at 9:15 a.m. and return at 12:45 p.m. On July 21, we are planning to go candle pin bowling (or billiards) in Marshfield and may set up a tournament for those wishing to participate. This trip leaves at 12:30 p.m. and returns at 3 p.m.

Other trips planned include a day at Duxbury Beach to swim, picnic, play frisbee, sand softball, water hocker, a whale watch out of Plymouth which should prove to be an unforgettable experience, a late afternoon and evening trip to Canobie Lake Park in Salem, N.H., a ride on the "Gracious Lady" out of Hingham to Boston, visit to the Aquarium, visit Fanueil Hall/Quincy Market and ride home on the Gracious Lady. Also, a boat ride to Georgia's Island—Harbor Island State Park—picnic and games and a "water taxi ride," and a bike hike and overnight camping trip from Norwell through Scituate, Cohasset, and Hingham to Wompatuck and back the next day.

OTHER PROGRAMS

Other Summer Programs include: Playgroup for preschoolers 3 to 5 years old, offered either Tuesdays and Thursdays or Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at the Osborn School from 9 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Fee is $5 each 2-day week or $7.50 for each 3-day week.

"Summerscene" is a general recreation program for youngsters entering Kindergarten through Grade 6 . . . games, sports, arts & crafts, contests, etc., from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. This program has been changed a bit from last year. We are providing an off-site field trip each week.

We are conducting a play day every other week where all three sites will meet at one playground for contests, games, tournaments, races and fun. We will highlight a different game each week to learn, play and compete with others in basketball, earthball, street hockey, pillo polo, hocker and teeball. Each day of the week there will be a period scheduled to play the game but other activities and games will also be offered.

We are also looking forward to providing a new program co-sponsored by Recreation and the Norwell Library called "Story Swap." Youngsters will be able to listen and share in storytelling, borrow books, and tell friends about some good summer reading. Story Swap will be 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. Mondays at Vinal, Tuesdays at Cole and Wednesdays at the Junior High (the three sites Summerscene is offered). The fee for a week of Summerscene is $6. Each of the programs mentioned so far may be registered on a weekly basis and started any week from July 11 to August 19. Each, except the field trips for Grades 7 to 12, will have unlimited enrollment.

SPECIAL INTEREST

Other special interest programs are also provided. Tennis lessons are offered for beginners, advanced beginners and intermediates Monday through Friday for a two week session, one-hour each day for $10. Sewing lessons will be offered for those entering Grade 6 and over, Monday through Friday, two weeks, 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. Swimming lessons will agian be offered through Anderson's Pool on a weekly basis Monday to Friday 9 to 10 a.m. for $10 a week. Techniques of drawing, painting, design, etc. will be stressed; opportunity to work with clay, paper mache, pariscraft is offered; silk screening, etching, scratchboard graphics; multi-media with weaving, stitchery, etc. It's a good program for those interested in art beyond the craft projects. The fee of $30 includes all materials as well as professional instruction.

Another new program is Aerobics for Youth, taught by Penny Boczanowski which will offer an hour of continuous movement to music, sure to get or keep you in shape. Offered on Mondays and Wednesdays, July 6 to Aug. 3 form 9 to 10 a.m. for only $10. The class is open to those entering Grades 6 and over and is limited to the first 15 to sign up.

Also new will be the sailboat rental offered weekday afternoons, weather permitting, at Jacobs Pond. Contact the Recreation Office for details at 659-7227. Archery for those at least 10 yeas of age and in Grades 5 and 6 will be offered Mondays and Wednesdays, 3:30 to 5 p.m. for $10 for a two-week session.

Office hours are Tuesdays through Thursdays 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Please register then, or call the office to make other arrangements if working parents. Although the general programs will continue registrations throughout the summer on a weekly basis, most of the special interest programs and the Summerfun field tirps have a limited enrollment or program deadline, so you should hot delay in registering for those activities. Heat fails to slow runners in 5.1 road race

By Cindi Bondi

Runners faced high 90 degree temperatures at the Annual Norwell Fourth of July 5.1 mile road race but that did not stop 103 runners and Don Reardon, of Hanover, who had a time of 27 minutes and 34 seconds.

Reardon said he just wanted to finish. "I thought that I might have had heat stroke because I still wasn't sweating after three miles. Four runners started to gain on me when my body started to sweat and get used to the heat."

Norwell physician Arthur Garceau is the "founding father" of the race. In the 1976 bi-centennial year, he organized the race with the help of the Board of Health, the Jaycees and the Recreation Commission. He was a patriotic sight attired in red and white striped shorts, a star spangled t-shirt and a red, white and blue sweat band.

Before the race he told everyone, "I'm glad that Alberto Salizer, one of the fastest road runners in the world, is not here because he would still run his hardest on a hot day like today. We don't want anyone to push like that."

Garceau had his best time of 58 minutes and 12 seconds and he won his category. "I've never won a first place in my life!" he exclaimed.

John Noland set the course record of 26 minutes and five seconds last year. Even though no one was out to set records all the runners finished and seemed to enjoy the race.

Marshfield's Julie McKeever came in third for the women's 19-39 category, with a time of 36 minutes and one second. She certainly had a fun run as she paced along to the sound of her walkman stereo.

Carolyn Cuniff, of Weymouth and Norwich University, took the overall win for the women with 30 minutes and two seconds. She just returned from army training in South Carolina and she ran to get back into shape for running.

Ten year-old Kate Mulkerrin and Daniel Thornton shared the honor for the youngest racers in Norwell. Daniel was cheered on by his dad, Vernon Thornton, who crossed the finish line with him.

Mulkerrin also placed second in the women's 18 and under category with a time of 36 minutes and ten seconds. Mulkerrin's plans for running are just "to become a good high school runner."

Sixty-nine year-old Lincoln Mathews finished in 44 minutes and ten seconds. He won the oldest racer award. That was two minutes faster than his time in 1976, when he started running this race.

This Fourth of July race is always a spirited holiday race as people cheer on the runners and wave flags along the route. Garceau said that next year he would like to reintroduce a bike race.

Summer intern program sponsored by Service League

"Learning through Experience" is the aim of a new summer program for Cohasset youths to help them make career decisions before they go to college.

Designed by the Social Service League of Cohasset and co-sponsored by the CHS Guidance Department, the summer intern program places juniors and seniors in "jobs" in the fields of their choice and interest for a two-week period, followed by evaluation of the experience by both student intern and his or her "employer."

The placement requires careful selection of students, matching a student to an organization where the youth can get the widest and most useful exposure to a chosen field, specific assigned tasks, and regular communication between placement sponsor and intern.

The student does not receive payment for the two week placement but the experience will duplicate actual employment.

Response to this concept has been extremely enthusiastic among area employers in fields ranging from advertising to Veterinary Medicine.

Many of those approached by the Social Service League committee members noted that they wished such a program had been available to them when they were still undecided about careers.

Thirty-two employers offered intern positions to the program. Some of them are: florist; carpentry; food retailing; auto mechanics; dentistry; plumbing; stock investment; insurance; museum work; and others.

Not all of these and other fields have been filled, and placements are still available for August. Application forms are available at the Social Service League Office in St. Stephens Church Hall (383-0771 from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. daily.)

The first "wave" of placements is alredy set for July, beginning on July 6 and ending July 20. Some placements are flexible in time, depending on the employer's schedule.

Ten students have been interviewed and selected to work in these areas:

Matthew Donnelly, advertising, Norfolk Partners, Ltd. Boston; Lisa Pierotti, social services, "Friend to Friend," Hull; Jackie Plante, radiology, Driftway Radiology, Scituate; Mason Sandell, Medicine, Boston City Hospital, one week, Brockton Hospital, one week; Tracy Fitzpatrick, Pediatrics- David Maltz, M.D. Cohasset; Debbie Soltesz, Interior Design, creations Philip Smith, Cohasset; Kirsty Munro, veterinary medicine, Kearns Animal Hospital Clinic, Hingham; Heidi Hublitz, architecture, James Sandell, Boston and Carla Lucas, special education, Braintree Mini-School.

Girl Scout opening delayed

The Cohasset Girl Scout Day Camp in Wheelwright Park off 260 North Main St. was delayed opening recently after an inspection by Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos and State Health Inspector, Karla Kelley.

The scouts were allowed to operate out of the Congregational Church, next to Town Hall, Eliopoulos said.

Eliopoulos said she was asked to inspect the site at 3:30 p.m. Friday, June 17, for an anticipated June 21 opening. "The latrines were not prepared, there was no drainage for the faucets, they needed hand-washing facilities, paths were needed to be cleared to the latrines and water faucet, medical procedures had to be in writing, and standing medical orders had to be approved and signed by a physician," Eliopoulos said.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said that his brother and Tree and Park Superintendent Peter Laugelle has cut the grass and cleared the brush. Peter Laugelle usually does this every year before the opening.

"Gosh, they've been operating up there, what, some 40 years without any trouble!" Rocco Laugelle said.

Camp Director Dorothy Bates, stressed there was poor communication between the state Department of Public Health and the Girl Scout Council regarding regulations. The camp has reopened and is operating after compliance with regulations.

Area camp formed by basketball coaches

Area basketball coaches have teamed up to form the area's only basketball day camp for boys.

Paul Svensen of Scituate High and John LeVangie of Boston College High have formed the South Shore Basketball Camp which will debut July 11 for five days.

The two men have formed a staff including such people as Ed Amaral of Hanover High, Mike Donnell of Hingham, Ed Minelli of Cohasset, and Paul Wholey of Hull High. Togo Palazzi, the former Boston Celtic and longtime athletic staff member at Holy Cross, will be the guest lecturer.

Both camp directors have much experience in summer camp instruction.

The camp is open for boys in Grades 5-8.

"We have taken what we feel are the best things from all the camps we have worked in the past and incorporated them into the South Shore Basketball Camp," Svensen said.

"We have set out to keep the numbers of campers limited to 100 so we have strong individual groups. We don't want to have a mass produced kind of camp."

The man behind Conway Country recalls 1st 25 years

By Jane Lane

He is a strict disciple of the Ben Franklin adage, "early to bed, early to rise, makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise."

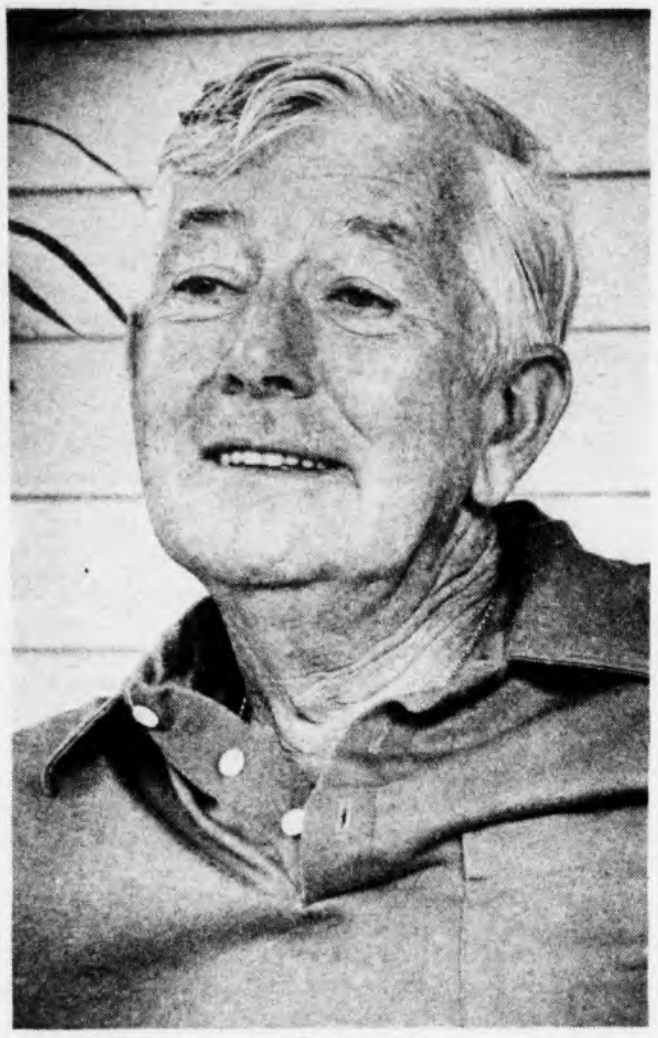
Jack Conway awakens in his Cohasset home at 6:30 a.m., dives into his backyard pool and swims a half mile every day. He works 12 hours, and then it's back home and in bed by 9 p.m.

This man who is a self-made real estate tycoon (but will argue that statement and say he began with his brother and owed much to his partner), is no egotistical tyrant.

That contentment flows through his lively conversation, which brims with gesturing hands, and broad smiles. He laughs easily and frequently. He is deservedly and obviously a man with high standards, and is pleased with the results.

It is often said that people who have succeeded in attaining their personal goals, strive for more, seemingly unattainable heights.

Conway is no exception.



In his efforts to keep trim, the 59 year-old Cohasset resident has charted a swim course for himself on a Mass. Bay chart in his bedroom. This summer he hopes to swim enough laps in his pool to reach Provincetown then to Wellfleet.

"I left Scituate Harbor on May 15," he explains of his imaginary sojourn. "I am now five miles east of the buoy, heading to Race Point. I figure 132 laps of the pool equal one mile, so I hope I can make it."

The man who owns and operates 26 real estate offices in Southeastern Massachusetts explains, "It is one of my small goals in life."

It is difficult to believe, but the climb to success hasn't always been calm for Conway.

The real estate business suffered a severe slump from 1973 to 1975, and mortgages were hard to find.

Jack Conway

He "experimented" with an idea at that time, and founded the Northern Mortgage Company.

Customers may now buy property through the Conway company, and also apply for a mortgage there.

"We've had our good and bad days," he says bluntly. "In fact both companies have nearly gone under two or three times. But just as in life, you tackle the problem and put it away. Then you start again."

Conway Country now encompasses 26 offices in just about every Southeastern Massachusetts community. But he is not one to sit still and silent.

He and his partner, John Reardon, will soon be expanding into a new office in Norwell, a three-story complex in Quincy Centre, with future expansion plans for Newton, Brighton, Westwood, Dedham, Jamaica Plain and his birthplace, Dorchester.

Certainly the name Conway is well-known and recognized as a real estate leader in the South Shore area. But he denies his offices monopolize the market.

"No one has a monopoly — there are too many of us in the business. I am not looking to dominate the business. I am just looking for a share of it," he says.

Conway proudly adds that his company dominates the share in most communities, "but not all."

This was not a business passed onto a prodigal son from a wealthy father.

Conway began as a reporter for the Boston Record American. He likens the satisfaction he received from that employment to the personal gratitude he gains in real estate.

"It is so satisfying to work on a story, write it and be able to see it in print the next day. It's the same way with real estate. You meet a family and try your hardest to find them a home that will make them happy. You

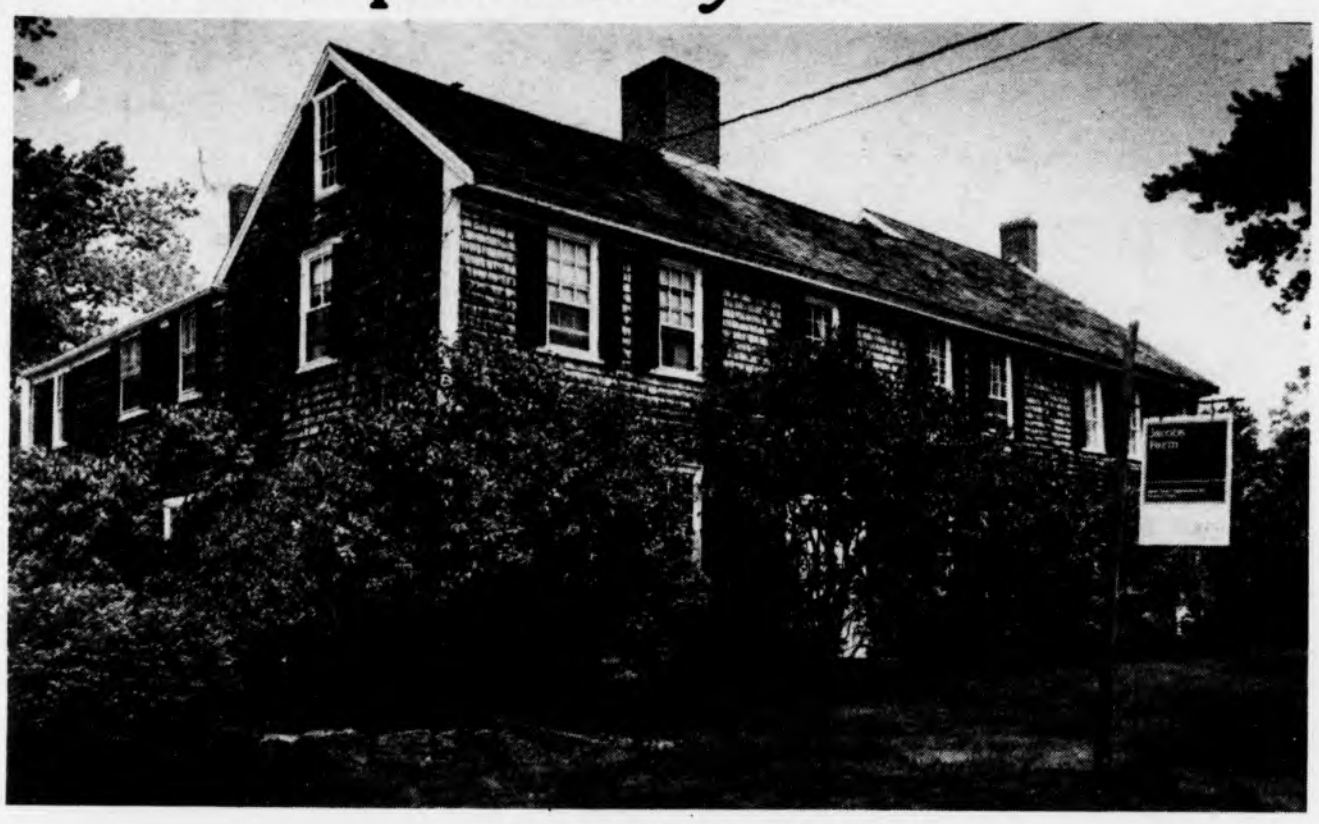
Trolley through Norwell's past July 10

By Milly Potter

"Many people think you have to go elsewhere to find history. They think everything happened in Lexington and Concord, or Plymouth." But that's not so in Norwell's case, says Jean Garside, president of the Norwell Historical Society.

For that reason—"to help people become familiar with the quantity and quality of 17th and 18th century houses in town, and how well preserved they are"—the historical society is sponsoring a trolley tour of a number of historic sites on Sunday, July 10.

Four tours will leave from the old Jacobs Farm on Main Street at noon, 1, 2 and 3 p.m. Tickets are $10 for historical society members, and $12 for non-members. The price includes a gourmet catered picnic lunch.



The trolley has been chartered from the Plymouth Rock Trolley Co., which operates the line in Plymouth, taking visitors around to see the sights.

Sunday's tours will take Norwell sightseers down Main Street to Bridge Street, across the North River to Marshfield and back again to Main, down River Street to Stetson Shrine Lane, to Common Street and Common Avenue, up Pine Street, Circuit, Pleasant, South Street to the Assinippi area, and back to the farm.

Along the way, they'll see the site of an Indian encampment off Bridge Street, the Samuel Stetson house on Stetson Shrine Lane (the historical society believes this is Norwell's oldest house, dating it at 1678), the Stetson family graves, the Jacobs family homesteads and Parsonage Row (so called because every house on that side of Main Street between the Deane Hartt house and Central Street was occupied at one time or another by ministers of the First Parish Church).

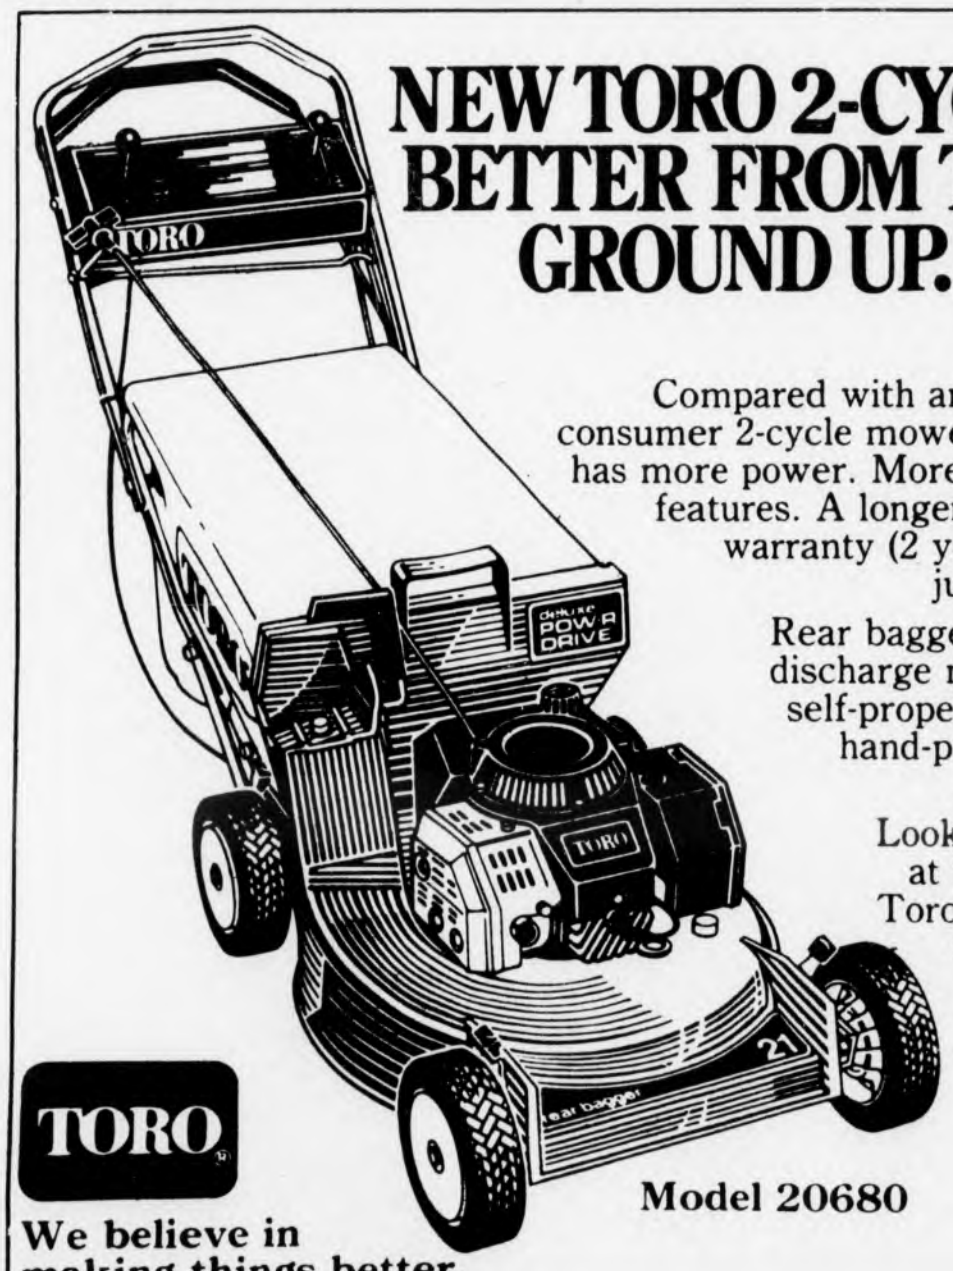
In all, more than 50 sites will be pointed out by narrators who will accompany each tirp.

The route was chosen because it showed a great deal of the town's history in a fairly compact area. But, Garside says, it really just scratches the surface. Another time, she'd like the tour to take in High Street and Ridge Hill—"an area rich in history"—or focus on some of the older cemeteries with their interesting inscriptions on stones.

Jacob's Farmhouse

A lot of the tour will concern the Stetson and Jacobs families, two of the oldest in town. The Stetsons (who eventually gave the nation the Stetson hat and Stetson shoes, thus "the complete Tom Selleck," jokes Garside), arrived in the person of one Cornet Stetson in the 17th century. "Cornet" is a military rank, like lieutenant, and so valuable was he to the militia in the early days of the Commonwealth's history that he was given a sizeable land grant in Norwell (then, of course, part of Scituate).

The Jacobs family began in Norwell with Joshua Jacobs, who built the farmhouse in 1726. His father, David Jacobs, had come from Hingham and settled in Greenbush. From there, the family spread out in the Assinippi area. Sons of the household fought in the Revolutionary War. A much later Jacobs, Sarah, taught school in the 1880's in the District Two Schoolhouse, now the Norwell Grange.



"History," Garside observes, "is about people who are dead, not dead people."

The trolley tour is the first event of such magnitude sponsored by the society, although there have been walking tours of the center, and the first Parish Cemetery. It is not a moneymaker for the organization, she says, and they expect to just break even.

Response has been enthusiastic to the trolley tours. "Save me two seats," one woman requested. "I've lived here 30 years, and I don't know where anything is."

In conjunction with the tours, and Jacobs farmhouse has been spruced up, and society members have brought out some memorabilia that hasn't been displayed in years, according to Garside. One of them is a

The Plymouth Trolley Company

Oddly enough, it was to promote more of Plymouth's history and sights than just its most famous landmark that the Plymouth Trolley Company came into being two years ago.

"People used to come just to look at the Rock. They'd say 'Oh, isn't that nice. Let's go home.' They would stay about 20 minutes," says Kevin McAuliffe, general manager of the trolley line.

But, he adds, there's a lot more to see in town than the famous stone.

The idea of the trolley tours came from William Barron, owner of the Mug 'n Muffin in the center of town, and president of the trolley company. Not unnaturally, he wanted tourists to stop in his eatery, McAuliffe said, but he also wanted to expose them to other points of interest, such as the Jenney Grist Mill and the Duck Pond.

It was Barron's partner, McAuliffe continued, who actually saw an ad for the trolleys, which are manufactured for the tourist trade in Naples, Fla. They went down, looked at them, and decided to go into the trolley tour business.

The vehicles aren't in fact actual restored trolleys. They're "almost like a motor home," McAuliffe said, with a trolley type superstructure, capable of reaching 55 miles an hour.

The company runs five trolleys, four in Plymouth and one in Falmouth. Of the four in Plymouth, three make a three-mile loop in the center, with guides pointing out the many historic sites and places of interest, and also the locations of the line's advertisers (different merchants in town pay a certain amount to have their advertisements mounted inside the vehicles, and without them, McAuliffe said, it's unlikely the line could afford to operate). The fourth trolley goes to Plimoth Plantation, and Cordage Park with its famous winery.

The locals also like the trolley as a means of getting around town, McAuliffe says. It costs 50 cents for a 25-minute ride.

Sometime in the forenoon on July 10, motorists on Route 3 will undoubtedly be surprised to see a trolley (with a smiling driver, McAuliffe promises, ringing the bell) heading northward to Norwell at a sedate 50 mph. He thinks it will cause quite a commotion. "It's the type of vehicle everybody has to look at," he says.

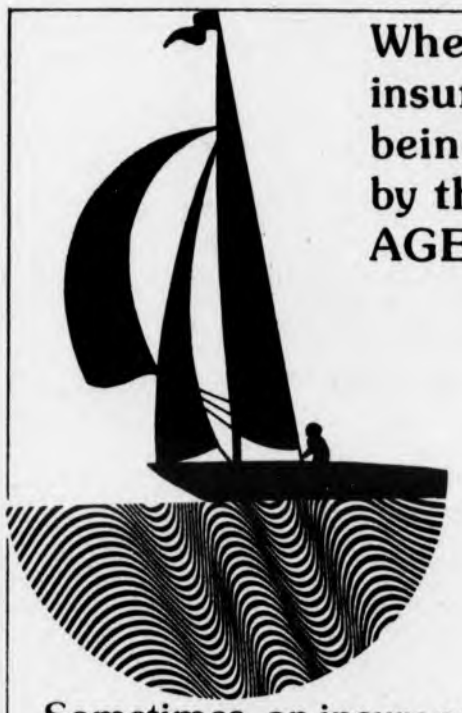
plaster cast of a skull, apparently used by Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs in his medical studies.

It was Dr. Jacobs who gave the historic old farmhouse to the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities in 1935. The museum side of the house is headquarters for the historical society.



One side effect of the tour may be increased membership in the historical society, which Garside would like to see. It costs $50 per person for life membership; $5 annually for family membership, and $3 annually for individual membership. "It's the best deal in town," Garside says.

The early rides are sold out but tickets are still available for 2 and 3 p.m. tours. For tickets, call Mrs. Garside at 659-7745 aftr 6 p.m.

Peace Corps needs couples

The Peace Corps is seeking at least 30 couples to serve as community agriculture extension volunteers overseas. This is the second year that couples having agriculture and home economics skills have been actively recruited by the Peace Corps. The volunteers will work with local people to increase the nutritional and income levels of selected communities in Latin America, Asia, Africa and the South Pacific.

While a college background is useful, community agriculture extension volunteers find the skills acquired by "hands on" experience even more valuable. For this particular program, the training for which will begin in October, a couple sharing skills in general construction, health, home economics and early childhood methods will be given special consideration. The Peace Corps has also indicated a particular interest in placing couples from rural areas of the United States.

introduce them to the right home and their new neighborhood, and you receive a great deal of personal satisfaction from it," he says.

Conway opened a small real estate office in Hingham Square in 1957. He worked alone for four or five months, and his brother, Eddie, later joined him. Their plans at that time were to maintain a small, quality business, which they did until 1960.

They then opened a second office along Rte. 3A in Cohasset and after phenomenal success, decided to expand into offices.

"It's been a lot of fun," he says, quickly adding that without the element of fun, all the money in the world couldn't make him happy.

His brother later died and he and his partner, Reardon — "a gift from God, my right-hand man," — now employ about 450 people in the different businesses they operate, including the real estate, mortgage, insurance, public relations firm, and The Satuit Restaurant in Scituate Harbor.

Conway has been married to wife Patty since 1954. The entrepeneur quickly adds that despite his thirst for daring business deeds, "I have never looked for new adventures outside my marriage. I am very happily married."

That partnership has produced three children of which Conway is equally proud and eager to talk about. His son Jack, 28, works for the Ft. Lauderdale News in Florida and runs a newspaper distribution business there. He is married and the father of Conway's five and two year-old grandchildren. He had just returned home last week from visiting them, and his ailing 84 year-old mother who resides in Florida.

His daughter, Barbara, is 27 and lives in Marshfield. And his third child, Carol, 20, is a senior at Providence College. Conway proudly notes she spent the past year studying at Dublin University, the third generation of his family to attend that school.

Despite his wealth and obvious love for his children, the strongest desire he holds for them "is to be happy."

"If I had just one wish for my children it would be for their happiness and contentment with themselves. Not everyone has to be a goal-chasing character like myself," he says, "although it's not an ego thing with me. But despite this crazy world, I hope my kids are happy with who they are."

Interspersed throughout the early morning interview last week were glimpses of the pleasure he finds in his life.

He proudly showcased his beautiful Colonial home, situated across from the Cohasset Common in the historic district.

He loves the district with its sidewalks for walking. And the serene Common, where he has an unobstructed view of the events which occur throughout the summer.

His high-ceiling home is comfortable, yet elegant. A visitor feels welcomed. He describes it as "old-fashioned," and acknowledges it is terrible to heat in the winter. The white clapboard Colonial is surrounded by beautiful flower gardens, faithfully attended to by Patty.

Besides the airy screened porch overlooking the pool, Conway's favorite room is the family room, complete with well-used furniture, television and telephone. The real estate veteran says a telephone is "always at a realtor's side." Another fixture in most of the rooms is a clock. A man with such a hurried schedule lives by the chimes of a clock.

There are only a few events which linger like an unwelcomed shadow over this man of many accomplishments.

One is the death of his father, Jack, a former sports columnist for the Evening Record American for 36 years. Another is the condition of his mother, now in a Florida convalescent home.

"It's so sad to see someone I have loved so much, go," he says. "She brought up five kids and is a great woman. She used to read five or six books a week. Now when I visit her, she sometimes doesn't know who I am."

The other source of disappointment, although no failure in his mind, was Conway's campaign for Congressman. He went up against incumbent Gerry Studds, a formidable opponent who had beaten his previous opponent five-to-one.

"At the very least," Conway chuckles, "I only lost two-to-one."

Conway still opposes "just about every stand Studds takes," and being a fiscal conservative, he says the incumbent has virtually ignored the business community. Pressured to enter the race from associates in the South Shore Chamber of Commerce and the Plymouth County Development Council, Conway hesitantly announced his candidacy.

Although he was soundly defeated, Conway maintains he is still opposed to many of Studds' actions, although "I respect the man absolutely. He works hard and is very honest. He is a great public speaker — one of the best; although I completely disagree with him, I would not run against him again."

I took my shot. I would not run again, but I would financially support any candidate who would oppose Studds. It takes a lot of money to run a campaign," he adds.

Conway spent about $210,000 in his campaign, and left with an outstanding debt of $50,000 at the conclusion. Not akin to owing money, Conway sold his Hyannis office and quickly paid off the debt.

"When I look back on the campaign, I think it was very worthwhile," he says. "In fact, it was the worthwhile event of my life. I was standing up for a principle I believe in. The office of United States Congressman should not go unchallenged. We have to have that opposing point of view. Unless we do, the whole nation is in jeopardy."

Noting that the campaign took its physical and financial toll, Conway surmises that Studds' next opponent "should be about 35 years-old and built like a Sherman tank."

Despite his lack of political success, no one would accuse Conway of a lack of business acumen.

Yet, he credits much of the company's success to the people he employs. Women in particular, he says, seem to dominate this field and prove to be outstanding business leaders.

He names women such as Isabel Dole, who heads Northern Mortgage Co., one of the most successful banking mortgage buildings in the state. Muriel Desmond heads the Cohasset realty office which has the highest volume of individual real estate sales in the state. She was the first woman hired by Conway.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

I came back from doing errands the other day feeling as triumphant as could be with a quart basket of ruby-red strawberries and fresh peas for dinner. The luscious berries were selling for $2 a quart and they weren't exactly giving away the peas, but who can resist the lure of a roadside stand? So, with the food budget totally shattered for that day, it seemed like a good time to try Gail Herman's economical casserole called

COMPANY BEEF CASSEROLE

1 lb. hamburg
1 onion, chopped
1 green pepper, diced
2 cans 8 oz. each, tomato sauce
Salt and pepper to taste
8 oz. each cottage cheese, cream cheese and cooked noodles
4 oz. sour cream

Cook and drain noodles. Brown onion, green pepper and meat in margarine. Drain. Add tomato sauce. Mix cottage, cream cheeses and sour cream. Line buttered 2-qt. baking dish with half the noodles. Put cheese mixture over top. Add remaining noodles and meat sauce. Top with grated cheddar if desired. Bake at 350 degrees 30 min., or until bubbly. Serves 4 to 6.

You don't have to go to Mexico on vacation to suffer "Montezuma's Revenge," for keeping food safe to eat is a challenge we all face in hot weather. Food poisoning is a fact of life that can take the joy out of any summer vacation and calls for some extra thought when handling food. For instance, when you have errands to do, save your food shopping for last in order to get refrigerated foods put away as soon as possible. Never defrost foods on top of the fridge, or countertop. Instead, defrost frozen products in the fridge or, if necessary, tightly wrapped under cold water—never at room temperature. Wash your hands and cutting surfaces often during preparation of your meal. Don't let cold cuts and cold-sliced meats reach room temperature; keep them below 40 degrees and serve cold. After your meal, store leftovers in refrigerator at once. It's not necessary to cool them on the counter first. Make a bee-line for home after stopping for the ingredients for Mable Hoffman's

Blueberries, strawberries and raspberries

DOUBLEBERRY WINE SAUCE

1 pkg. (10 oz.) frozen raspberries
1½ c. cranberry juice cocktail
1/4 c. sugar
3 T cornstarch
1/2 c. dry red wine

In saucepan, bring berries and juice to boiling. Press through sieve. Return juice mixture to pan. Stir together sugar and cornstarch. Add to raspberry mixture. Cook and stir until thick and bubbly. Stir in wine. Cool and serve over sherberts. Serves 12.

No longer do we have to eat travel-weary, imported anemic tomatoes and berries, for just about now the deluge of native tomatoes, squash and cukes begins. It's time to gorge on such delights a Millie Carr's

ZUCCHINI CASSEROLE

4 to 6 zucchini squash
2 medium onions
1 tsp. salt, 1/8 tsp. pepper
6 to 8 oz. sharp cheddar cheese, cubed
1 egg, slightly beaten
10 to 12 saltines

Slice zucchini and onions, cook with salt and pepper until tender. Drain off water, stir in cheese and let cool while you beat the egg and crush the crackers. Mix in egg, add the crackers. Stir until mixture has consistency of thick, mashed potatoes. Place in oven dish and bake at 325 degrees for 30 min.

A Beautiful Approach to Country Living.

You drive in through meadows strewn with seasonal wildflowers. But that's only your entry to the good life at The Meadows, The Green Company's new community of attached single family homes in Hingham. The architectural style is true to the farm-house heritage of the community. The construction and detailing have been accomplished with obvious pride.

The Meadows offers a selection of two and three bedroom homes with unexpected details like master suites with private fireplaced sitting areas, large country kitchens for informal entertaining, separate dining rooms for more formal occasions, hidden corners for quiet contemplation, and a mix of ceiling heights and styles. In addition there are large private courtyards, two-car garages, full basements, a swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. And best of all, this very civilized lifestyle is near major highways to the cultural delights of Boston and vacation areas to the North and South.

Prices range from $157,000 to $210,000 during this, our opening period. Furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street, one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment. When it comes to a good life in the country, The Meadows leads the field!

Citizens against gambling at LANCE meeting

Citizens Against Casino Gambling, Inc. was represented at the June 23 meeting of L.A.N.C.E. (Legislators Against New Casino Establishments) in New York City by the group's president, Carol Oteri, and board member Beth Harling.

LANCE is a 10 state coalition of anti-casino legislators and grassroots activists. Massachusetts State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, who represents Hull, Cohasset and Hingham, is a founding member of LANCE but was unable to attend because of legislative budget hearings. But she did write a letter to express thanks and encouragement.

Dr. Gerald Lynch, president of John Jay College of Criminal Justice and chairman of former New York governor Hugh Carey's Casino Gambling Study Panel were the luncheon speakers.

As a member of N.Y.A.C. (New Yorkers Against Casinos) he re-affirmed his opposition.

Discussing New Jersey's legalization of casino gambling the nationally recognized expert said, "You get all sorts of 'nice' legislation but you don't get the nice results promised."

Thomas Laverne, executive director of No Dice-We Love New York, Inc., moderated a panel of anti-casino activists. The most useful information may have come from a casino opponenet who has tasted defeat.

Thomas Mechling, a freelance journalist who worked against the 1974 New Jersey referendum which first attempted to legalize casinos in his state said, "All done, we beat them so badly we thought they'd never come back. But two years later they doubled the ante and our guard was down. Now we have casinos."

C.A.C.G.'s Oteri confided that her group's success necessitates constant efforts to inform the public that the issue of casino gambling has not gone away but is actually smoldering beneath the surface.

Connecticut's Fred Soliani detailed his state's recent close brush with casinos. Interestingly, Soliani first met L.A.N.C.E. founder Steve Casey when Casey was among his first grade pupils. Now a retired school principal Soliani cooperates with Casey on anti-casino activities.

Jonathan Altshuler, of N.Y.A.C. president said casinos convert a town from a place to "simply a place to gamble, prompting No Dice's Laverne to add that "inch by inch New Jersey is becoming a company state."

Following strategy and press sessions L.A.N.C.E. members agreed to meet again in late summer.

Patriot superstars play ball for TIC

Star players, coaches and beautiful members of the New England Patriots cheerleaders, and Patriots Spirits, will take part in a benefit softball game on Sunday, July 10, at the South River Field in Marshfield right across from the Marshfield Fair Grounds.

Admission is free and the game will benefit the Talking Information Center (TIC), a closed circuit radio station providing information to the visually impaired. The Patriots will play the Beacon Street Bombers, a softball team comprised of blind players that has lost only two games in the past two years. The game will start at 4 p.m.

Scheduled to appear for the Patriots are defensive back Roland James, defenseive back and kick returner Ricky Smith who set a Patriots record with a 107 yard kickoff return last year, Cedric Jones, wide receiver, other players and coaches and members of the Spirits. Transportation for the Beacon Street Bombers team is being graciously provided by the South Shore Community Action Council of Plymouth.

Delightful Dining by Sylvia

Barbecuing is a cooking technique actually made popular by the American Indian. Cooking over coals adds great flavor and fun to meals. Try using fruitwood, such as apple or cherry for an added dimension. It should take between 30 and 45 minutes for the coals to achieve the gray ash coating and red-glowing inside that is ideal for cooking. Marinate meats, poultry and fish for extra flavor and help in breaking down toughness. Olive oil in marinades insures that the meats will not stick to the grill. Try pre-cooking foods such as roasts that require a lengthy time over the coals. This way, drying can be avoided and yet you will still get 30 minutes of basting time over the coals.

From over the coals or in the oven, the end result of any prepared dish comes from the quality ingredients one starts with, combined with the seasonings and special touches added along the way. At NORTH RIVER HOUSE, 456 Columbia Rt., Rts. 53 & 139, Hanover, *all our menu items receive the same fine and experienced attention in preparation, every guest the same courtesy of staff and serving and all who come enjoy the comfortable and pleasing surroundings. The man behind Conway Country...

Women such as Nora Moran in Beacon Hill, Pat Donahue in Hingham, Faith Palmer in Sandwich, and Peg Broan in Marshfield have helped increase the business in countless ways. Peg has tripled the volume of sales in the Marshfield office, he states.

He is equally proud of his wife, who has devoted years of volunteer service to Catholic Charities in Brockton. This year, with the help of Human Services secretary Phil Johnston, the Brockton coalition for the Homeless in Brockton, of which Patty is treasurer, bought a home to be used by the thousands of homeless residents in Brockton.

Conway and his Brockton executive, Tom Rudolph, found the building and secured a mortgage, with the assistance of a state grant and Johnston's long hours of work.

"Patty shares in my success and I share in her work," Conway says.

"Here I am at 59, and have worked for 26 years to put this business together. I have no intention of retiring," he says. "I look forward to the year 2008 — I'll be 84 then. I fugure I can go at least that long before I retire. By then, I should have built a pretty good company."

Odds & ends for hammock musings

By Lois Martin

Amazing, There are odds and ends of our society that serve to confound. Here are some of them for hammock musing.

—What is this nonsense about "when construction begins on Rte. 3"? When did it every stop? Who among us has driven it when it didn't have those orange and white stripe barrels? Why don't they say "when yet more construction starts on Rte. 3?" I suspect there are families who can point to three recent generations of workmen on that highway.

—I'll tell you one thing about video games that's violent. And that's the discussion of them. I think we ought to ban video talk among grown men before they clobber one another. That is home rule, isn't it?

PATCHES

—The word "distaff" as reference to a wife is archaic. A term referring to "spinning" in its origin, it is clearly a title too few are qualified to bear.

—Would it be possible for someone to design a two-piece bathing suit with a pleasantly mature multiple mother in mind. Either that or could a tattoo ingenue fashion appealing options that use stretch marks as a graphic base . . . and ones that wash off?

—Hal called last week. It wasn't all that much fun chatting with him because Hal was, my luck, a recording. Bad enough to call and be answered by a recording. Now you answer a recording who may promise investment rewards, as Hal did for me. Next thing you know people will be too busy to make their own obscene phone calls.

—I love new sunglasses. I don't know why they have glamour appeal that regular eyewear lacks. But it's the devil trying to see around that little tag in the middle of my new shades.

—I wouldn't have blamed Dapper O'Neill's mother if she were given to crying jags.

—There should be a sneaker offered that falls between the plain white sensible ones and those that are dead serious about jogging. There's a sneaker market for the sassy sport who was joking about running.

—Maybe sometime they will let some women vote on the abortion issue. Just a thought.

—Vacations are harder to plan than work.

—It seems as though whenever I can find the phone book, the number I need is unlisted.

—Perhaps there's no truth in a remark I heard today,

"Nobody goes to Brockton for anything good." Oh, dear.

—There are several enticing attention getters that people should try as a last resort—an ace bandage over her pantyhose; a beeper with an antenna for long distance beeps; or a name tag in your own home.

—And what, for gosh sakes, does "All things being equal" mean? It's a waste anyway 'cause all things are not equal.

Q. Aren't some utility company dividend payments free of tax?

A. The portion of utility company dividends that the I.R.S. determines to be a return of capital rather than dividends from earnings is free of federal tax. The shareholder is required to reduce his cost by the amount of that return of capital. The payments that qualify vary widely from year to year, but we will be happy to furnish you with a list of the utilities that anticipate such a tax-free return for 1983.

Q. I'd like to be investing in growth stocks because I feel the outlook for business is good over the next few years. However, I really don't have time to research the companies that represent the best buys today. What can you recommend?

A. You need investment management which can be had in several ways. With relatively large amounts of money it may be logical to hire the services of a professional investment management firm or a bank trust department. Your broker may offer you a discretionary amount in which case he makes the decisions, or you prefer a mutual fund whose investment objectives are similar to yours and whose performance has been superior.

The Language of Investing

Bid & Asked: "Bid" represents the price a prospective buyer is willing to pay; "asked" is the & Asked: price the seller will accept. The two prices & Asked: are called a "quotation" or "quote".

TOOTH WEAR

Older dental patients may be aware of the toll that years of using their teeth have taken. The teeth wear down. The result can be sharp edges which may chronically irritate the surrounding tissue. Or, worn down teeth may produce a change in bite which can produce symptoms of pain in the jaw joints, flabby facial muscles and/or difficulty with chewing. Excessively worn teeth may be worn clear down to the pulp causing infection or abcesses. Tooth wear should be treated so as to prevent further wear and to restore tooth height that has been lost. This can be achieved with appliances that fit over teeth, permanent crowns, inlays or bonding.

The physical changes maturity brings make adult teeth as susceptible to decay as a child's. Here at the offices of DRS. BRACKETT, CURRO & MITSCH we believe in preventive dentistry and strive to teach all members of your family how to care for their teeth between visits. You will find us at 130 Broad St. in Weymouth or phone 335-1576 for an appointment.

DENTAL TIP

Abrasive tooth pastes should not be constantly used to achieve white teeth. The whitest layer of your teeth, the top layer, may actually wear down.

Midsummernight's dream of a Solstice

By Patty Desmond

The summer solstice came and went, leaving the ocean waters filled with inhospitable schools of jellyfish.

Have you ever noticed that sea water is oft more suited for human bathing at times when jellyfish or other scary creatures happen to be about?

The summer solstice is a magical time. There's more sunshine and possibility.

The sun moves every June 21 from the airy Gemini to the watery Cancer. That's particularly important and magical for me since it forebodes the celebration of my birth.

Somehow the fact that I was born still seems important to me—although I've been having trouble remembering my exact age every since I turned 30.

I wonder if senility begins at 30? I wonder if I'll be able to forget turning 40?

Shakespeare knew the summer solstice was a magic time. He wove that knowledge into the center of the world he constructed for the Queen of the Fairies in A Midsummer Night's Dream.

And so when it happened on Midsummer's night, the shortest night of the year, that I woke to hear a bird singing in the blackness of pre-morning, I knew something deep inside me was working its ways into my conscious. (Magic times being those best described as unconsciousness released.)

The bird kept singing outside, louder than the hum of my air conditioner, trilling, chirping in the silent neighborhood.

Threads of my interrupted dream flashed through my mind as I stared out into the night.

In my dream my children were playing in the sun, at the edge of the harbor waters. They were playing together and laughing—something that usually happens in my waking hours only if the older one has been suitably bribed.

They smiled at each other.

They were at the edge of the harbor waters, feet wet and shorts looking damp.

My daughter, looking like the near teenager she is, was digging through the muddied sand with a plastic shovel, obviously loaned by her brother, the four-and-a-half year-old.

Her hair looked blonder than it has in recent years. It seemed it was as blonde as it had been when she was his age. He was digging too. They kept smiling and digging, cooperating on some venture that in the beginning seemed to be child's play.

I couldn't hear them talking but I could see their lips moving. A sailboat decked out in a Tiajuana sunrise blast of red and orange slipped through the background.

It didn't seem they could see me.

There were a few other people on the beach in my dream sleep. No other children. And no one who logically should have been there.

Off on a beach towel, I could see a love I parted with many years before, and a special woman who once helped me through a dark time and then died, and other people I'd lost in one way or another.

Seeing these old friends gathered made me want to touch them—made me want to show them I still remembered the good feelings, still missed them.

The children—my children—had dredged a body sized hole by now and their eyes kept staring into the sand. They were working quicker now, the tide was moving toward their excavation.

All at once they screamed out with joy in my sleep, as they dug up a capped glass bottle. Obviously the bottle was something they knew was buried. Obviously they wanted it badly and fully expected to reach it.

The screams woke me.

I still don't know what my children searched for in my midsummer night's dream.

But now that I'm awake, I'm very glad they found it.

'Fair on the Village Green' July 8 & 9

Several special events have been planned for the annual "Fair on the Village Green" of the First Congregational Church of Marshfield to be held on July 8 and 9, beginning at 10 a.m. daily.

The popular Penny Sale will take place on Friday, July 8, at 7:30 p.m. in the Parish House. Many certificates, gifts and unusual items have been donated for this event. A $15 gift certificate will be the door prize.

On Saturday, July 9, at 12 noon there will be a "Circus Parade" outdoors. Participants are invited to dress as circus characters or to enter a decorated bicycle or baby carriage. Prizes will be awarded for originality. There is a 25 cents entrants' fee for the parade which will form, beginning at 11:30 a.m.

An old-fashioned Ham and Bean Supper will be served in the Parish House, starting at 5:30 p.m. on Saturday, July 9. The menu will also include salad, rolls and nut breads, beverages, and native strawberry shortcake. Tickets will be available at the door at $3.50 for adults and $1.50 for children under 12 years of age.

A culminating highlight of the two-day event will be the Country Auction under the big tent on Saturday, July 9, at 7:30 p.m. with Russell Chandler as the auctioneer. Each year buyers have bid for usable, collectible, and antique articles at this auction.

During the fair, a variety of tables will be set up under the tent. Shoppers will find aprons and handwork, books, candy, china and collectibles, food, international gifts, jewelry, plants, toys, and items made by the Handicrafters' Group of the church.

A Silent Auction will offer many items including a Korean child's costume and a farm barn, built by Fred Bennett, a miniature specialist.

Bargain hunters will be able to browse through the Attic Treasures in the Parish House on both days of the fair.

Children's games will also be set up in the downstairs area of the Parish House.

Additions to the Book Table this year will be records, pictures, and an assortment of postage stamps for collectors.

The Senior High Youth Fellowship of the church will be in charge of a Snack Bar on both fair days.

Donations for the fair may be left at the Parish House weekday mornings between 9 a.m. and 12 noon. The church is located at the intersection of Routes 139 and 3A in Marshfield Center.

Prior to and during the fair, raffle tickets will be sold for a dollhouse and a television set.

That is the Celtics' M.L. Carr who stopped dribbling last weekend to talk with young campers at Camp Millbrook. (Among that crowd there's bound to be a future basketball star.)

Water supply not threatened

Septage plan approved

By Theresa Sullivan and Pat Walsh

The Water Commission approved a plan last week to allow Hull to dump its treated sludge at the Cohasset landfill in return for accepting Cohasset's septage.

After study, the commission determined the Hull sludge would not pollute Cohasset's water supply.

Water commissioners and Supt. Ben Curley questioned the future purity of the town's water supply should the sludge leak from the Cedar Street sanitary landfill.

The public landfill is near a stream which flows into Lily Pond, the town's main reservoir.

Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulous said there are no health regulations which prohibit sludge deposit.

The state Dept. of Environmental Quality Engineering approved the exchange and state officials commented the exchange is apparently a perfectly reasonable inter-community relationship, Eliopoulous said.

Before July 1, the town had eliminated septage from homeowner's septic tanks into the Metropolitan District Commission sewer system in Hingham.

But the MDC two weeks ago ruled Cohasset, Hanover and Norwell do not have the proper permits to dump septage.

Hull does not have an approved landfill to dump sludge. The town has been storing the waste in sealed tanks. Eliopoulous said, "We will not accept the sludge that's been sitting there for a year."

Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis said sludge is nontoxic and is not hazardous. "It is the least hazardous substance which could be dumped in the landfill. What comes out of your garage and my garage is infinitely more toxic and more hazardous than sludge will ever be," he said.

Eliopoulous added, "There is an agreement and intention to comply with periodic monitoring of sludge. We would like to ask for once-a-week testing."

In a related matter, Hull Sewer Plant Manager Edward Kendrick said Monday Hull has recently been accepting septic tank and cesspool waste pumped from Cohasset homeowners on an emergency basis.

Septage hauler Ross Rosano estimated Cohasset homeowners will be paying an additional $20 to $25 more per load to have septage removed.

Hull is charging $22.50 per load for septage and sludge from the Cohasset sewer plant which is delivered to the Nantasket Ave. plant.

Rosano said he formerly charged $45 per load up to

Basketball coaching position still up in the air

By Mike Berger

Wednesday night at 8 p.m., the Cohasset School Committee has some old business to tend to.

The committee has to act on incumbent basketball Coach Ed Minelli.

Should the committee accept the recommendation of CHS Principal Dick Streeter and School Supt. Eugene Crowell and hire jr-senior high school teacher Ken Cisneros or vote to re-appoint Minelli?

Three basketball players who have played for Minelli and others who are now playing and wished not to be named feel administrators are making a big mistake.

The players feel Minelli is the coach who can take the Skippers to a division title, possibly this year or next.

The players feel the team has the talent and the enthusiasm and the expertise in the basketball knowledge of Minelli whose offensive ideas were borrowed by former Boston Celtic and NBA player Dave Cowens and brought to the Milwaukee Bucks.

Minelli was also chosen by the state to head the regional basketball tryouts for the Bay State Games, a youth oriented summer sports festival.

Administrators said nearly three weeks ago Minelli was not teaching sufficient fundamental basketball despite improving the team's record in two years from 1-17 to a 10-10 record in a tough South Shore League.

In addition, both Crowell and Streeter feel CHS should have coaches who are also academic instructors at the high school.

Regarding fundamentals, three players interviwed said many team members pleaded with Minelli to stop an hours worth of fundamental practicing to go on with a scrimmage.

Minelli confirmed this and said he would spend at least one hour of every practice on offensive and defensive fundamentals.

David Barcomb, a 6-2 senior, is the captain next year and is optimistic four returning starters and three top scorers should boost the team's title hopes.

The non-reappointment of Minelli, said Barcomb, would be an interruption of the progress the team has made in two years.

"It would be a detriment to a good season," he said.

Barcomb said Minelli's knowledge of basketball is quite extensive and his implementation of several offensive and defensive strategies has led to the team's success.

"Coach Minelli should remain the coach. That's the

Condo construction draws public meeting

Joan Appel of 4 Holly Lane isn't satisfied with the contractors and developers regarding noise control at 100 Pond Street.

She has decided to call a public meeting at her home Thursday, July 21 at 8 p.m. to begin drafting a noise control ordinance.

In June Appel and neighbors in the Pond Street-Holly Lane area were so upset with the early morning condominium construction that they took the matter to selectmen.

Selectmen authorized Executive Secretary Mark Lanza to write a letter to Frederick Thayer, owner of the 100 Pond Street project.

The letter said selectmen were informed heavy construction equipment operated in the early morning hours (at approximately 7 a.m.) and continued until after 6 p.m.

Selectmen requested Thayer to restrict his contractors and heavy construction work between 7:30 and 6 p.m.

Appel said last week work began around 6:30 a.m. and continued to 6:45 p.m. Police were called and the noise levels were reported but officers reported back to Police Chief Joseph Kealey the noise was not excessive.

Thayer said Monday night he was not informed of the noise incidents last week. He said he received Lanza's letter and agreed with the content of the letter.

"It's news to me," he said regarding the noise complaints.

He added he doesn't feel the noise problem is a problem.

Meanwhile, Appel asked a representative of the state Dept. of Environmental Quality Engineering to inspect the muffler on the backhoe used by the contractor.

Appel said if the inspection finds the pro muffler isn't proper, a violation would be issued.

She has also asked DEQE to help enforce the construction times. Appel feels the matter is serious. She has received two complaints from two women, one who is dying of cancer and another woman who is in a period of mourning.

Kealey said his officers will investigate any noise complaints but incidents at 100 Pond Street are difficult to enforce because there is no ordinance in the town bylaws.

Kealey said recently police were called for noise complaints on Jerusalem Road for loud pool parties and loud music. Kealey said he doubts whether the court will hear such complaints unless it is proved the noise was excessive and damage was caused.

Besides calling a public meeting, Appel plans to ask the Board of Health for assistance.

Helping to draft a noise ordinance for town meeting will be Atty. Mark DeGiacomo who lives on Holly Lane.

Boat decals

Boatowners who have paid mooring fees may pick up decals from the harbormaster.

These decals must be displayed on the stern of all boats moored in Cohasset Harbor prior to Sunday, July 31.

The issuance of these decals was voted at the April town meeting.

There will be a strict enforcement of the decal requirement. Boats not displaying the decal may be removed from the harbor, Ritter said, and their space re-assigned. The boat's mooring tackle will be pulled and held for retrieval for 72 hours.

After that, "I will not be responsible," Ritter said. He added water skiing regulations on Little Harbor will be enforced as well as the 30-minute tie-up at the town floats.

Ritter said he will issue the decals at his office on Government Island, Border Street, from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Saturday and Sundays and Wednesday evenings from 6 to 8 p.m.

Cohasset's week . . .

Flint, investor

Treasurer-Collector Gordon Flint said last week that the town got more than a flag from the visit of Channel 5. The TV station filmed part of its Family Fourth Celebration on Cohasset Common.

"I invested the binder of $25,000 they left with us for a month (as insurance and to bond cleanup). The town earned about $100 interest," Flint said.

Wharf parking lot

Selectmen will discuss this week whether the town may lease the Government Island parking lot to Hugo's Restaurant.

Two weeks ago, selectmen said they would try to work out some arrangement for the restaurant to use the lot for valet parking. Atty. Charles Humphreys, representing the restaurant owners, said the additional parking space is needed because of the overflow of vehicles parked along Border Street. Selectmen at that time agreed it would relieve a lot of traffic problems if those vehicles were removed from Border Street and parked within a lot.

Selectmen also agreed with Atty. Humphreys that the 80-space parking lot is underused, and leasing the property to Hugo's would not eliminate the public's use of the area.

But last week, Government Island study committee member Richard Barrow said the land is zoned residential, and it may not be possible to lease to the local business

Barrow said the property should remain public, and not be used by a private business. He argued that many residents use the lot, especially during weekend.

Selectmen will discuss the issue, and whether a final lease can be negotiated, at Wednesday night's meeting.

Commercial Mussel Licenses

At selectmen's meeting two weeks ago, two residents agreed with a state report which stated that if the town's five commercial mussel fishing licenses were used daily, the mussel population would be depleted in three months.

The Department of Marine Fisheries concluded in a recent report that if all five mussel licenses were used and fishermen harvested a capacity of 30 bushels a day, the mussel population would be eliminated within three months.

Two residents who live along the harbor agreed that opening the harbor to commercial mussel fishing would be detrimental to the ecology of the harbor.

This spring, selectmen issued five mussel fishing licenses which would allow a harvest of 30 bushels per day. Only two of the licenses were used, and they expired June 30.

Conservation Commission member Jack Hubbard disagreed with Elizabeth Durant and Edward Long. Hubbard said the conservation of the mussel population would be an easier task than conserving the clam flats. Because mussels cling to the surface of rocks, they are visible and can be monitored, he said.

Selectmen will discuss the issuance of commercial licenses at Wednesday night's meeting.

Beach Sticker Policy

Selectmen will discuss once again the policy regarding the issuance of beach stickers at their meeting Wednesday night.

The latest review came on the heels of a complaint by housemates Susan Rich and Connie Clifford. The two women complained to selectmen that their Consitutional rights were being infringed upon because they were being discriminated against. The two women, who are not related but share a house, said they were being discriminated against because they were being forced to pay the full cost of two beach stickers. If they were related, they said, they would be allowed to purchase the first sticker for the full $10 price, and the second sticker at $2.

The two wommen said the town's bylaws do not state the members of a household must be related in order to receive the second sticker discount.

Selectmen argued that household members must be related in order to qualify for the discount. That was the policy worked out between the recreation commission and selectmen, they said.

Selectmen said they would like input from the recreation when they discuss the policy Wednesday night

Puppet-shows

The Village Green Puppeteers are returning to Cohasset with the magical, imaginative puppet theater. The Cohasset Community Center will be the setting for the shows offered twice each day.

Wednesday, July 13, "Peter Rabbit" and other stories will be presented at 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. The following week, Wednesday, July 20, "The Princess and the Pea" and other stories will be shown.

Admission to the shows is $2.

Hazardous Material meeting

The Hazardous Material Advisory Committee will meet Thursday, July 14 at 7:30 p.m. at the Water Department on King Street. Topics to be discussed include the hazardous material spill procedure, a questionnaire, a hazardous material fact sheet and approval and implementation plans and a waste oil disposal list.

First sewer system fails

Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos reported to the health board the apparent failure of a septic system designed by Pio Lombardi. This system was planned to serve two dwellings at 664 Jerusalem Road owned by architect James Shipsky.

Engineer John Modzelewski requested that the system be tested by introducing the maximum amount of water that the two houses might be expected to contribute, Eliopoulos said. "They put the water in, and it blew," said Eliopoulos.

She added, "That was our first experience with an Innovative Alternative Septic System." "And it didn't work!" said Health Board Member Dr. Michael Bliss.

Eliopoulos said following the test Shipsky "left town for Arizona."

Express mail service available

The U.S. Postal Service is expanding its Express Mail next day service to the Cohasset Post Office.

Monday, July 11, the Cohasset Post Office became an official Express Mail acceptance office. Residents can now mail Express Mail shipments up until 5 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Cohasset Post Office and the post office will guarantee next day delivery to any city or post office in the Express Mail network.

Express Mail shipments weighing two pounds or less can be sent anywhere in the country, and delivered right to the door, for only $9.35. Rates for heavier items will vary according to weight, destination and delivery option requested. Additional information in this fast overnight delivery service is available at the Cohasset Post Office, 100 Ripley Road, at 383-0138, or by calling the Postal Service's new toll-free Express Mail information line at 1-800-322-0707.

Revenue sharing protected

The U.S. Senate Finance Committee recently approved an amendment authored by Massachusetts Senator Paul Tsongas which will prevent Cohasset from losing revenue sharing funds because 1982 tax bills were mailed late as a result of court-ordered property revaluation.

Without the Tsongas amendment, Cohasset may have had an amount adjusted downward because of the delay in tax bill mailing. Tsongas proposed the tax collection received within 60 days after the mailing of bills could be included in their tax collection effort and prevent the loss of any revenue sharing funds this year. Revenue sharing is a federal program of assistance to local government.

School Committee meeting

The School Committee will meet Wednesday, July 13 at 8 p.m. in the Home Economics Room of the junior-senior high school. On the agenda are end-of-year transfer of accounts, a computer update, bid awards and an update on the Basic Skills program. The committee will also vote to enter into executive session for the purpose of negotiations.

Notices sent

The Board of Health voted to send two warning letters to residents with 21-day time limitations. Arthur Roebuck of 312 Beechwood St. will be warned he has 21 days to complete septic system repairs. Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos said the old cesspool had holes in it and had been discharging into the Bound Brook.

Eliopoulos said she had difficulty getting the cooperation of the residents of 555 Beechwood Street, whose stable had been "in disrepair." She said they kept three to five horses as well as turkeys. The owners will be notified they have 21 days to comply with health board regulations.

Engineers needed

Selectmen Chairman Mary Jane McArthur said the Selectmen are still actively seeking volunteers to serve on town boards and committees. "We especially need engineers," she said.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said he sent out over 60 letters to engineers who are residents of the town, but received only three replies, to the request they volunteer to serve.

Any interested citizens should call selectmen or Lanza at 383-0228.

Gjesteby to MAPC

Martha Gjesteby of Cohasset was elected to the Executive Committee of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC) at the recent annual meeting.

The Metropolitan Area Planning Council was established in 1963 as the official regional planning agency for 101 Greater Boston communities.

Food protection

The Board of Health has recently received a publication from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, "A Registry of Manager Training and Certification Programs in Food Protection."

Food handlers, restaurant owners and managers, etc., should be interested in a course offered by the Blue Hills Regional Technical Vocational High School, Canton.

The board would be interested in hearing from anyone who has taken the course.

These courses offer valuable information on food-borne diseases, food protection, food-handling practices, and management of food service establishments.

The registry is available for review at the Board of Health office. It is helpful to those anxious to pursue a career in a food-service related profession.

Ground water film

Thursday, July 14, the Board of Health will have a short slide/tape show entitled "Out of Sight — Not Out of Danger." The show addresses groundwater management and protection and it presents information on groundwater movement, contamination, and protection techniques.

The film was photographed and written by Laurie Mazerov, a D.E.Q.E. staff member, and Sandy Mullaney of D.E.Q.E. will be in Cohasset that day to answer questions.

The film will be shown at the Board of Health office, 43 Elm Street at 7 p.m. Those people interested should call the Board of Health office.

Basketball coaching position up in air consensus of the team and I have talked to several school committee members and the school superintendent," Barcomb said.

Some of the current players and parents interviewed asked not to be quoted for fear of reprisal.

They said Minelli has accomplished a great deal and should not be the victim of politics. Whatever problem he had is choosing the amount of playing time for his players.

But many players felt Minelli had sound reasons for choosing the squad on the floor.

CHS graduate Jack Maloney is going to Dartmouth next year and played two years under Minelli at the guard position.

He went through the bad year as well as the optimistic season.

His reaction: "No one knows basketball better than Ed Minelli and no one else I have seen has given so much of himself to put in the time. He also cares about the players and the welfare of them."

"I would say the basic rub has been his ability to relate to his players but since the very beginning when he took over he has improved over 100 percent. He is on his way to becoming a well-rounded coach.

"As far as fundamentals, there is no one better," Maloney said.

He added the team morale when the season ended in March was "pretty good." He also acknowleged the team last season had many younger players who were not used to the varsity level.

Larry Hoogeveen played two years as a forward for Minelli.

His reaction is: "With the talent he had during his first year, he did an outstanding job. We weren't getting along with each other because we were losing all those games."

"In fact many of the kids couldn't even make a layup," Hoogeveen said.

"But last year we played much better. The morale was 100 percent better. We won some big games, games no one expected us to win."

"Coach Minelli, I feel, is the most fundamentally sound coach on the South Shore. We spent half our practice on fundamentals."

"This could be a tournament team either this year or next," he said.

1,250 gallons. The increase, he said, is because of increased dumping costs and the additional transportation time through the beach traffic in Hull.

Cohasset Sewer Plant Operator Manny Salvador said haulers formerly charged $10 per load to dump the septage in the MDC plant.

Salvador said the sewer plant sludge is normally pumped out three times a week. Because of the change, it is expected that sewered homeowners costs may also rise.

Salvador disagreed with DeSantis who said the Cohasset sewer plant would get a cheaper rate.

Salvador said Cohasset commercial establishments, homeowners and the sewer plant have to pay to use the Hull facility but there are no plans yet for Hull to pay to dump the resulting sludge into the Cedar Street landfill.

Salvador feels it isn't fair for Cohasset to pick up all the labor and machine costs for mixing and spreading the sludge at the landfill when the capacity of the landfill (five to ten years) may be further reduced.

Kendrick said Hull has not agreed to accept septage from Norwell yet but officials have agreed to review Norwell's application. Salvador warned if Norwell's septage is accepted, it may only add to the sludge Hull will be dumping at the Cohasset landfill.

Hull has an incinerator which has never been run. The incinerator is oil fired and was designed when oil was inexpensive in the early 1970s.

At that time it was expected it would cost over $100,000 annually to operate.

It is believed that figure has ballooned to $1 million to incinerate the sludge.

For a closer look into the decision made by the Board of Health to accept the Hull contract, turn to page nine.

At the South Shore Art Center

Landscape painting, a sculpture workshop in wax and an advanced photo workshop are three intensive workshops offered once a year by the South Shore Art Center.

Scheduled for July and August, each workshop is designed as an intensive learning experience for artists wanting to expand their ability beyond the basics.

Landscape painting for intermediate and advanced levels, taught by Margaret Dillon, runs Aug. 8 through Aug. 12 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.;

Sculpture Workshop in Wax, preparation for bronze casting, taught by Dennis Kowal, runs July 25 to July 29, from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.;

Advanced Photo Workshop, taught by Peter Anderson, runs Aug. 7 through Aug. 12, from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

The courses will be taught on location and in the Center' studio, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset. Advanced registration is required for the intensive workshop.

Dillon's landscape painting will emphasize composition, color and design and students may choose the medium in which they wish to work. An award winning exhibitor in Boston and New York, Dillon is represented by Helen Shlien Gallery, Boston.

She is a member of the National Society of Painters in Casein and Acrylics and did graduate work at the University of Guadalajara, Mexico. She has also studied at the Art Institute, Circolo Studenti in Rome and the Art Students League.

Kowal's sculpture workshop is designed to acquaint the student with the lost wax method of bronze casting. Working independently, the students will work in sculpture wax. If desired a trip to a foundry will be arranged.

The nationally known sculputor has numerous public commissions including several in the Boston area. One of his pieces may be seen outside the Federal Reserve Bank Building in downtown Boston. He served as artist-in-residence at Dartmouth College and DeCordova and has recevied many fellowships including MacDowell Colony and Yadoo.

Anderson, a former Time-Life photo journalist, will use Paragon Park as the subject for his advanced photo workshop. He will work with his students to capture the outer and inner life of the park both by day and by night. He will conduct sessions on portraiture, architectural abstractions, cover pictorial candids, macro close-ups and night shooting. Students may shoot both color and black and white film. The Center's darkroom is available for black and white processing.

Anderson is currently a faculty member of RIT and was formerly associated with RISD, the N.E. School of Photography and the N.Y. International Center of Photography.

Each of these workshops offer students the expertise of instructors well known in their respective fields and an opportunity to advance their levels of artistic skills. For registration, call the Center, 383-9548.

around town

☐Anyone who wishes to know about Nantucket is in luck. Just ask Therese Lennon, Peg Maynard, Liz Pearce, or Lisa Mercurio, who have just returned from a vacation on the Island. The foursome brought their bikes and had a grand time touring and taking in all the sights.

☐Ann Enos, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Enos, 55 Elm St., was awarded a master of science degree in nursing at graduation exercises held recently at Yale University, New Haven, Conn. She received a bachelor of science in nursing from Boston College. Ann is a 1973 C.H.S. graduate.

☐The Strawberry Parfait is every "Mother's Helper" in the summer . . . it's always there to do the cooking or buy a treat for the little ones! Even the cast of Annie found out about it; they lined up in between shows almost every day.

☐Suzanne Bird, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bird of 4 Surrey Drive, made the Dean's List and Semester Honors for the year at the University of New Hampshire. Suzanne graduated from C.H.S. in 1982 (everyone remembers her role as Mammie Yokum in the senior class play!)

☐Marie Johnston certainly has reason to be delighted these days! Marie is an interior decorator who was asked to decorate a room in the Junior League Show House this year. She chose the Afternoon Tea Room, which was photographed for House Beautiful's Home Decorating issue, Fall. There were only four rooms chosen by House Beautiful so Marie has a reason to be extremely proud. Three other national magazines wanted to run pictures of her room, but she was allowed to give it to one only.

☐Leo Fiori had a difficult time concentrating at work last week. He was so full of emotions about his daughter's wedding last Saturday . . . bet he looked handsome in his "monkey suit."

☐Larry Fone, owner of "Cookworks," held a contest recently. He had a handsome "Cookie Bear" that needed a name and Alice Riley came up with the winning name of "Claiborne." Claiborne was a "he" bear. In August there will be a "she-bear" on display just waiting for a name.

☐Hope Dick Connelly is feeling much better following his recent surgery, and that he is up and around real soon.

☐The Wilson family went to Bermuda recently and a "fine time was had by all."

☐Despite the heat that prevailed throughout the July 4 weekend, the South Shore Art Festival was very successful. There was something for everyone, whether it be to buy or to look , it was great . . .

☐Dr. Barry C. Tufts of Cohasset graduated from Tufts University School of Dental Medicine on Friday, June 10, where he was awarded the D.M.D. degree. Doctor Tufts also received national recognition for his outstanding interest and proficiency in pediatric dentistry when he was awarded the Certificate of Merit from the American Society of Dentistry for Children. Doctor Tufts received his bachelor of science degree from Fairleigh Dickinson University and was a clinical researcher in nutrition at Harvard Medical School before attending Tufts Dental. Dr. Tufts has been appointed to a faculty position at Tufts University School of Dental Medicine where he will teach radiology, and he will also practice dentistry on the South Shore.

☐Koren A. Lipsett, a sophomore from Cohasset, has received highest honors for the spring term at Skidmore College, Saratoga Springs. Highest honors are awarded for a quality grade point ratio of 3.6 or more from a possible 4.0. Honors are awarded for a ratio of 3.2 to 3.59. Ms. Lipsett is the daughter of Mrs. Valerie A. Lipsett of 85 Elm St.

☐John G. Howley, Jr., and Darilyn O'Neill of Cohasset received B.A. degrees at the 162nd commencement exercises of Colby College. Howley graduated with distinction in the major of economics. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John G. Howley, Sr., of Windy Hill Road. A government and economics major, both with a concentration in public policy, O'Neill is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald J. O'Neill of Jerusalem Road. Both Colby graduates prepared for college at Cohasset High School.

☐Lisa Seadale is in town this week, she is here for her wedding! One of our favorite people, we wish you much happiness, Lisa.

☐Congratulations to Thomas and Joan Bowman of 47 James Lane, brand new parents of a baby boy. Seems as if it is a boy year in 1983!

☐Bruce and Lois Cameron had a party last week for the cast of "Annie." Their sons, Jamie and Jason, enjoyed the kids so much they were spotted at the show more than once afterwards.

☐Be sure to visit the Country Store Restaurant in Scituate Harbor where Polly Litchfield is at the helm once again. She's one super lady, don't forget to say "hello" to her.

☐All runners are reminded of the 9th annual Gurnet Classic Beach Run, which will be held July 23 at 4 p.m. at the Gurnet Inn, Duxbury Beach. It is a 4 mile run open to the first 1,000 runners. Write to Gurnet Classic Beach Run, Box 463, Brant Rock, 02020.

Telephone shutdown

The disruption of phone service in Cohasset last month deserves a following look.

The phone news died down lately but one should not forget the telephone shutdown during the last two weeks in June.

As we reported in the June 29 issue, the most unfortunate aspect of the incident is it could happen again and without advance warning to Cohasset phone customers.

New England Telephone has blamed Guthrie Fence, Inc., of Springfield for causing two power outages within two weeks. Guthrie Fence had been contracted by the state Dept. of Public Works to install new guard rails on Route 3A. The owners of Guthrie Fence denied these claims and said the cable cut was caused by N.E.T. workers.

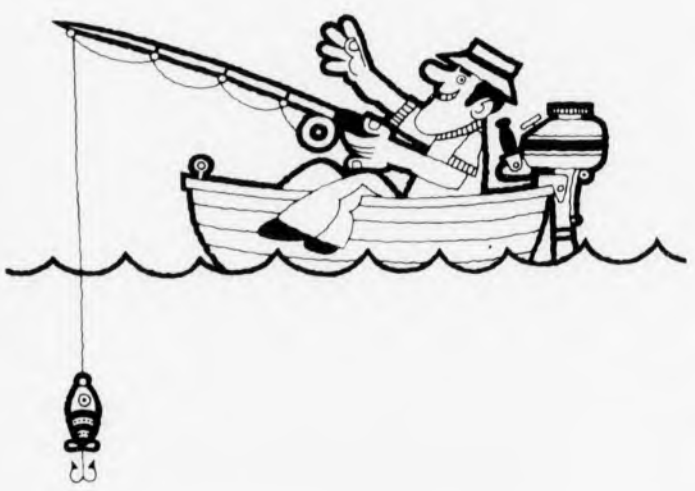
Whenever cable underground construction is in progress the state has ordered all contractors to call "Dig Safe" to arrange final construction plans.

Whose fault it is here is difficult to determine and Guthrie Fence and N.E.T. may end up in court over the incident.

But where does this leave Cohasset phone customers if construction should again cut the cables?

Holding the phone with a dial tone, no doubt.

Jackie Jung, N.E.T. spokesman, said she could not guarantee a phone cutoff won't happen again. At the same time, N.E.T. officials emphasize that they are serious that correct installation procedures be followed by all contractors involved.



A proposal by Executive Secretary Mark Lanza for an internal Civil Defense communications system is a sound idea.

Their idea should be followed up by Lanza, Police Chief Joseph Kealy and Fire Chief Martin Dooley. They should meet with N.E.T. officials to map out an emergency system.

Telephone disruption is an inconvenience at best and can quickly evolve into an emergency.

We agree with the letter by Peter Pratt and selectmen suggesting that Cohasset customers receive automtic rebate. Having to call an N.E.T. customer representative to arrange for a rebate is an insult added to the insult of no phone service for two to three days.

What needs to be done is for N.E.T. to take the lead and sit down with Cohasset officials to specifically detail what emergency communications system will be set up and where and how will residents know about it.

Madam Zolar's solar insights

By Claire McDonough

Oh, my goodness. The Sun, Mars, and Mercury are all in Cancer, and wouldn't you just know it, Jupiter, Uranus, Neptune and Pluto have all gone retrograde. As if that weren't enough, Venus is in Leo and Saturn is in Libra, and you know what that means.

Clearly, we are in need of guidance from Madam Zolar, particularly since we've already passed through the summer solstice. I schlepped on over to Madam's chic little ashram on Third Cliff, and after I crossed her palm with lots of silver she agreed to part with a few words of wisdom for you zodiophiles out there.

Aries (March 21 - April 20): All those retrograde planets, combined with four planets in Cancer tend to make people lethargic. In your case, this means you may slow down to the point where you stop insulting people. If you have any friends left after that April burst of Martian energy, this is the time to cultivate them.

Taurus (April 21 - May 20): Since you already spend most of your life (with some memorable exceptions) in first gear, it's hard to see how you could slow down any more without becoming comatose. You would be well advised to spend the next month in bed.

Gemini (May 21 - June 20): Bad news for both of you this month. People will be too lackadazical and too unwilling to part with any of their money to pay serious attention to your scams. Your best bet would be to find an Aries who is trying to cultivate friends.

Cancer (June 21 - July 22): Happy birthday, Moon Children. Have I got good news for you! The local police will not learn of all the unusual presents you received at your natal festivities.

Leo (July 23 - August 22): You will have a month filled with romance, adventure and wealth beyond your wildest dreams. Unfortunately, all of the above will be in those Harlequin Romances you can't seem to put down.

Virgo (August 23 - September 22): You will surprise all your friends by abandoning your usual neat and methodical life style. You will succumb to a wild, madcap impulse and go three days without cleaning the lint trap in your dryer.

Libra (September 23 - October 22): You will write to Ann Landers because you will fall in love with a married man whose wife is a wrestler and who thinks you are a chiropracter. Her reply will arrive too late to help.

Scorpio (October 23 - November 21): Congratulations! You will beat the income tax evasion rap. Unfortunately, the tax examiner will be a Taurus who is spending the month in bed, and you will not learn of his decision until you have sold all your assets and fled the country.

Sagittarius (November 22 - December 20): You will graphically demonstrate that you have not yet learned to control your Sagittarian bluntness when you attempt to compliment a new superior by saying, "You're not nearly as fat as everyone says you are."

Capricorn (December 21 - January 20): Good news and bad news. The good news is that the police will recover your stolen DeLorean. The bad news is that they will look in the trunk.

Aquarius (January 21 - February 18): Current astrological placements will constrain your madcap, zany enthusiasm. The other eleven signs will be profoundly grateful.

Pisces (February 19 - March 20): For once you are in step with the rest of the world. Confused, tired and tearful. Just the kind of a month you love.

Note to all Signs: An unscrupulous sun sign astrologer will attempt to mislead you through a column in a local newspaper. Ignore her. She is only doing this because she can't think of anything else to write about.

Septic emergency expedites health board

By Patricia Anne Walsh

It is often said that local and or state government works at a snail's pace.

But during the past two weeks, Cohasset has seen the Board of Health work swiftly, despite the nearness of the July 4 holiday weekend to enact an agreement with the Hull Sewer Commission regarding the MDC ban on septage haulers from Cohasset.

It all started June 30 when the Cohasset health board called an emergency meeting to approve a contract with Hull despite reservations from selectmen and Cohasset residents.

The contract would permite the swap of Cohasset's septage for Hull's sludge.

The contract would allow the effluent pumped from the septic tanks of Cohasset residences and commercial establishments to be trucked by haulers to the Hull sewer plant and dumped.

In return Hull's sludge, the residue left after sewage treatment, would be trucked to the Cohasset public landfill on Cedar Street.

At the June 30 emergency meeting health board members Dr. Michael Bliss and Barbara Kern attended but board Chairman Marily Sweeney, who has ben absent from board meetings several times this year, did not attend.

Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulous hand delivered a letter which she obtained in Boston from William St. Hilaire, regional environmental engineer from the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

St. Hilaire had agreed to the dumping of the Hull sludge at the Cohasset landfill after the MDC prohibited Hull and Cohasset from dumping in the MDC facilities.

St. Hilaire wrote, "It is our understanding that existing private wells are more than one quarter mile away from the landfill."

Land developer Joseph Crossen and Ann Pompeo protested to the board that there were many wells within one-quarter mile from the landfill.

Cohasset is served by both the Cohasset and Hingham water companies but there are several homes on Cedar Street, Lamberts Lane and Forest Avenue who have private wells.

Crossen urged the health board to review several final home plans because he felt many of the wells constructed were within one quarter mile of the landfill and "one was very near the boundary."

Crossen said if the health board allowed the Hull sludge to be dumped at the Cedar Street dump, then the responsibility of the condition of the wells could become that of the board.

Prescott explains fair housing rule

Letters

To the Editor:

A great deal of publicity has recently been given regarding Fair Housing and compliance with Executive Order No. 215.

Hopefully the following information will give the residents of Cohasset and others concerned a clearer understanding of the situation.

At the present time at 60 Elm Street the Cohasset Housing Authority has 64 apartments which have 100 percent occupancy at all times. These apartments are for the elderly and are under the control of the Cohasset Housing Authority and the Department of Community Affairs.

We also have in Cohasset three units of housing that fall under the EOCD. These rental units are subsidized and administered by the EOCD under Section 8. The Housing Authority has for the past two years investigated ways in which additional low cost housing units could be developed in Cohasset. This has been a difficult task as it is impossible to make plans and take affirmative action when there is no money available in DCA or HUD funds. Available property or existing structures that could be utilized for this type of housing cannot be examined or discussed when there is no idea of when funds will be allocated and in what amount.

Unless the General Court passes Bill S2034 and funds are in this bill for such housing for Cohasset it is the writer's opinion that the Town of Cohasset cannot comply with laws restricting grant funds.

While the writer is chairman of the Cohasset Housing Authority the views and interpretation of laws concerning the issues are his own.

Murray's Memos

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

WHEN A FEE IS REALLY A TAX...

In 1980, legislation known as the Omnibus Fee Bill became law. It transferred the authority to raise fees charged for a wide variety of licenses and registrations from the House and Senate to the Secretary of Administration and Finance. I voted against this legislation because further hidden taxes would result.

Fees affecting hundreds of thousands of Massachusetts residents — drivers, barbers, plumbers, small businessmen, fishermen, boaters — were raised. The cost of a driver's license doubled from $10 to $20.

In 1981, the cost of the auto inspection was also raised 100 percent — from $2 to $4.

At that time, 10 citizens led by House Republican Leader William G. Robinson, filed suit claiming that the 100 percent increase in the fee was, in fact, a tax because it exceeded the cost of performing an inspection. The Superior Court Justice agreed. The State, however, appealed the decision and the Appeals Court overturned the original injunction mostly because of the confusion that would have resulted in attempting to refund persons who had already paid the $4 inspection fee.

Now, in 1983, with only the minimum of required public notice, the administation has raised the fees for drivers' licenses and registrations again. Class 1 licenses increased 25 percent from $20 to $25. Registrations rose from $20 to $24.

WHY SUE AGAIN OVER SUCH A SMALL AMOUNT OF MONEY?

Last week, 10 auto owners, led by the House Republican, filed a complaint against the administration in the Superior Court charging that these fee increases are really a disguised tax and asking for a temporary restraining order. The temporary restraining order, which would have held the fees at the previous level, was denied. The complaint, however, is still pending.

At issue is not the amount of the increase, but the concept of increasing fees in excess of the cost of the service provided.

A 1924 Supreme Judicial Court decision holds that a fee becomes a tax if the revenue derived thereof exceeds the actual cost of providing the service for which that fee is charged. While, under the 1980 Omnibus Fee Act, the administration may increase or decrease fees based on the costs of a program, it may not impose a tax. Under the Constitution, only the legislature may impose a tax.

Clearly, given Governor Dukakis' campaign claims that he would not raise broad-based taxes, we have to raise the question — are these and hundreds of other "nickle and dime" fee increases really broad-based hidden taxes?

THE MONSTROUS $100 MILLION TAX INCREASE

Better duck, because it's coming at you fast and furiously. Everyone — and I mean every consumer, business and corporation in Massachusetts will be affected by this $100 million tax package if it passes through the Legislature and is signed into law by the Governor.

Clearly, it is reprehensible to call this $100 million tax burden to the Commonwealth's citizenry as it is commonly known — the "Revenue Enhancement and Protection plan." It is a monstrous tax increase, involving everything and everyone.

So let's set the record straight and call it what it really is: The Monstrous $100 Million Tax Increase.

The $100 million monster tax package raises the cigarette tax higher than ever proposed. It establishes a new excise tax on the employers of Massachusetts and increases the capital gains tax.

The package's burdensome intent doesn't stop there. Every single taxpayer benefit has been gutted, from the one-time $125,000 tax cut for the sale of a home to the federal two-earner married couple deduction. Furthermore, caps have been placed on several deductions, including Social Security contributions, child care and corporate use of tax credits in a single year.

Jeff Giles' autobiography

The first annual Mariner $250 scholarship was awarded to CHS senior Jeff Giles.

The annual scholarship was established by Publisher David Cutler as part of a subscription drive earlier in the year.

The Mariner asked Cohasset High School to find a student who has produced outstanding written work, through academics, student newspaper or yearbook.

Here is a short biography of Jeff written by himself and a copy of an award-winning essay written by Jeff for the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee.

Committee Chairman Donna McGee asked the Mariner to print the essay. She said, "Jeffrey wrote the essay in a competition sponsored by the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee's Annual Joseph F. Walsh, III, Memorial Scholarship contest. Because it is so thoughtful and comes so close to the original meaning behind the contest, we ask that you reprint it so that other young people might receive the message so eloquently expressed by Jeff."

JEFF GILES

People rarely ask me to write about myself. And, once they do, they almost never ask again. So, I am at once flattered and wary at this opportunity to be my own best friend — afraid that once I have finished talking about myself The Mariner won't sell me a

Pompeo urged that toxicity tests be made which would cost about $1500. She said the proof of the safety of the land application of the sludge needed to be demonstated.

Two preliminary set of tests on one sample sent from Hull to Briggs Engineering resulted in very different findings. These tests determine the level of many chemicals such as lead, cadmium, molybdenum and selenium.

Bliss and Kern said they had not asked for retesting by the state lab because the tests may take up to six or eight weeks.

When Town Council Richard Henderson arrived, Bliss said he should make a change in the contract to allow for testing of the Hull sludge.

The 45-day preliminary contract would allow one ten-yard load of Hull sludge a week to be dumped in Cohasset. Kern and Bliss said this would be freshly generated sludge, "because old sludge would be much worse."

Hull officials later asked for changes in the contract regarding this language.

Hull has over 300,000 gallons of old sludge stored at its sewer plant. Crossen estimated that amount of sludge might equal 200 medium truck loads.

The meeting began at 7 p.m. and Eliopoulous urged Bliss and Kern to vote before 7:30 p.m. because the Hull Sewer Commission was due to meet at 7:30 p.m. to discuss the proposed contract.

At the Hull sewer plant, commissioners Joseph Gratta and John Kelley attended as well as plant manager Edward Kendrick, director Jill Tollefson and Health Agent Jennifer Lamb.

Arriving from Cohasset were Bliss, Kern, Eliopoulous and Henderson as well as Selectmen John DeBassio and Frank England.

Kendrick proposed the amount of sludge to be dumped in Cohasset be increased from 10 to 15 cubic yards which is a load for one of Hull's large trailers.

He also asked that Cohasset accept old sludge and agreed to test the first couple of truckloads and others later as agreed.

Kendrick said he understood from Eliopoulous that Cohasset has business establishments which need to be pumped every day and that these include the South Shore Music Circus during the summer.

Music Circus Director Ronald Rawson said the Circus is pumped once each year before the season opens and only occasionally once in the middle of the summer season.

Kendrick acknowledged Hull has 300,000 gallons of sludge and he added Hull sludge is not dangerous.

Kendrick said he had not heard the results of the first tests of the sludge but only the second set "over the phone from Briggs."

Eliopoulous acknowledged the first tests showed molydenum as high as 1056 parts per million. Kendrick said 1056 parts was nearly twice what was permitted for land application on his charts.

Henderson agreed to meet with Hull Town Counsel Edward Lampke July 2 to finalize the contract for presentation to the Hull Board of Health and selectmen July 5.

Kendrick and Kelley said they would seek a third emergency vote (legal quorum) by telephone the next morning (July 1) to allow Cohasset to dump septage in Hull the same day and on a day-to-day basis until the contract was approved.

Friday, July 1, Eliopoulous telephoned until 1 p.m. businesses, employers and some homeowners in Cohasset to say, "You have to hurry and get your septic tank pumped. You must have your hauler remove the waste before 3:30 p.m. today. We only have permission to dump it in Hull until that time, for today only. Be sure and get pumped today because you many not be able to pump it for weeks."

Tollefson said the Hull commissioners were polled by telephone. They were able to reach four of five commissioners and by 10:15 a.m., the sewer commission voted to allow licensed Cohasset and Hull haulers to dump at the Hull facility on a day-to-day basis until the contract was approved.

Friday, July 1, state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray thought she secured permission from the MDC tc allow Cohasset to continue dumping septage into the MDC lines for 30 more days.

Murray said her husband Phil had received a message from the MDC approving the extension but by Tuesday the MDC had changed its mind and did not approve the extension.

Murray said she is aware of the protests of residents regarding sufficient testing and the presence of wells in the area. She said she talked to St. Hilaire, "a strict environmentalist" and he assured her the sludge would be tested for toxicity.

Murray informed St. Hilaire of the location of the private wells.

From Thursday June 30 to Friday July 1 communication between community officials was brisk. The question is: Can government work like that all the time or only in an emergency?

subscription, let alone ask me to contribute even another dangling modifier to their paper.

With graduation, I confidently, yet somewhat wistfully, left behind a high school career that meant more to me than I could have ever hoped. My position as Feature Editor of the High School Times, a student-written and produced publication circulated in over 150 greater Boston schools, taught me the discipline of style and tone which has since had an overwhelming affect on my work. More importantly, however, it taught me how to care; not just about the sentences but about the faces and the issues behind them

My junior year also marked my initiation into the staff of Highwire, a national student periodical with a circulation of one-half million. While editing the Cohasset Lamplight and the High School Times instilled in me the need to write out of political and personal motives, Highwire taught me how to write for money — a sad but inevitable part of any writer's career. Along with the things you won't say and the things you can't say, I discovered an even broader realm: the things you won't get paid to say.

Although I have recently earned something of a reputation for anti-establishment editorializing, I dedicate most of my time and effort to creative works. My poetry, or rhymed anti-establishment editorializing, has appeared frequently in the high school literary magazine and from time to time in the Mariner, that other local paper, and Reflections — a national poetry magazine for students. Just recently, my first short story was awarded an honorable mention in a nationwide fiction contest.

Next year will find me in Providence, studying English at Brown University with a few hundred other young and foolish idealists who still believe that things have to be changed and that someone has to change them.

ESSAY

It seems ironic, or, perhaps more accurately, disheartening that the fundamental values of which the American government was once created have so quickly become so trivial. As the nation passes slowly but irrevocably in the uncertain age of nuclear warfare, it is threatened with a loss incalculable in terms of properties or armaments: the loss of hope. For, in classrooms throughout the country, sits a generation reflecting not the ambition and promise which inspried America's political system but rather the apathy and complacency which could one day destroy it.

With every day comes the frightening realization that the country's dilemmas simply cannot and will not cure themselves. The daily newscasts and newspapers endlessly confront the public with the broken hopes and hunger which has slowly overtaken the nation. But, for too many, for too long, it has been easy to look the other way. Time has revealed quite clearly that the struggle of the future lies with the young and their willingness to undertake it; the truest concern, then, of the American government should not be teaching its children how to use guns but teaching them instead why they must or mustn't.

Now that the turmoil of the 1960s has become a distant memory, it is possible, and advantageous, to study the effect of a dissatisfied youth on its government. Perhaps most striking is the suggestion that activity of virtually any nature can prove beneficial in that it promotes change and betterment. While it is true that many of the decade's "rebels" chose inappropriate means of protest, it is also true that they cared enough about America and its government to defend their convictions. Surely, this is not a lesson which the nation has not outgrown.

America needs more slogans and campaigns, more leaders and more causes — not the petty, transient pursuits it so often indulges in but rather sincere and weighty issues which challenge the very foundation of its political community. American needs to get people mad again — but mad about the right things.

Perhaps then this new generation will grow into a confident and productive society; perhaps then the American government will win the people's unanimous support simply because they understand it, or, if nothing less, are trying to. But until this time, the dissension and unrest can only continue. The young can only grow into tired, withdrawn soldiers — never stopping to wonder why they are killing or why. And they blame the rich of they can blame the poor but only when they start blaming themselves will they be truly American.

Health Board refuses to reinstate Laugelle

By Patricia Anne Walsh

The Board of Health has refused to rescind their vote to fire town dump supervisor Joseph Laugelle.

Laugelle's attorney, Charles Humphreys, confirmed this after an executive session with the health board Monday night.

Laugelle's hearing, which was scheduled for 8:30 to 9 p.m., did not begin until 8:45 p.m.

Humphreys immediately asked for an executive session.

Attending the open session were Selectmen Chairman Mary Jane McArthur, Water Commissioner Peter Pratt, Advisory Board Member Fred Koed, Tree and Park Superintendent Peter Laugelle (Joseph Laugelle's brother).

The executive session broke once while Humphreys conferred with Laugelle out on the front lawn, and the Health Board conferred inside the health board building. Laugelle and Humphreys returned inside and the executive session ended almost an hour after it began.

Humphreys said they had offered the board a number of suggestions for improving the operation of the Cedar Street Landfill, which the board appeared to accept. However, he said, they refused to change their minds regarding the termination of Joe Laugelle.

Humphreys said he would seek a hearing before selectmen under the new bylaw "as soon as possible."

At the conclusion of the Health Board meeting, Chairman Marilyn Sweeney said Laugelle had continued to work, and been paid, after May 31. The health board planned to terminate Laugelle's employment May 31.

Town Counsel ruled we couldn't fire him, said member Barbara Kern. Sweeney and Kern said they "have a plan," but would not reveal the details.

Selectmen "unanimously, with the abstention of Selectman Laugelle (Rocco, Joseph's brother) voted to deny the Board of Health's request to seek a second legal opinion concerning the termination of landfill supervisor Joseph Laugelle," Executive Secretary Mark Lanza wrote the health board.

"Second legal opinions which show a lack of reliance on the legal expertise of Town Counsel, defeats the purpose of retaining Town Counsel. Please follow Town Counsel's opinion concerning the matter and proceed on the advice given," Lanza said.

"The Board of Selectmen has refused to pay for a second opinion for the Board of Health," said Kern. "It would cost us $75 per hour to retain counsel."

The health board feels it has jurisdiction to terminate Laugelle under state laws, despite the recent passage of a Personnel Bylaw at the April Town Meeting, which calls for review by the Selectmen and the Personnel Board.

Health board members said they have not yet had a reply from the Attorney General to whom they have also appealed.

"Laugelle refused to resign," Sweeney revealed.

You do not waste your time and money learning about someone else's boats and gadgets or waiting for others to take their turn at the helm. You will receive personalized instruction from a mature and patient individual who:
*sailed 26 years on the Caribbean, Atlantic & Pacific Oceans *taught at the well-known New York Sailing School
*skippered for the Tufts National Championship Sailing Team

A Beautiful Approach to Country Living.

You drive in through meadows strewn with seasonal wildflowers. But that's only your entry to the good life at The Meadows, The Green Company's new community of attached single family homes in Hingham. The architectural style is true to the farm-house heritage of the community. The construction and detailing have been accomplished with obvious pride.

The Meadows offers a selection of two and three bedroom homes with unexpected details like master suites with private fireplaced sitting areas, large country kitchens for informal entertaining, separate dining rooms for more formal occasions, hidden corners for quiet contemplation, and a mix of ceiling heights and styles. In addition there are large private courtyards, two-car garages, full basements, a swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. And best of all, this very civilized lifestyle is near major highways to the cultural delights of Boston and vacation areas to the North and South.

Prices range from $157,000 to $210,000 during this, our opening period. Furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street, one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment. When it comes to a good life in the country, The Meadows leads the field!

Duncombe, Evans, Weisenfluh win Finlay South Jr.

Cohasset Yacht Club sailors Amy Duncombe, Martha Evans and Kurt Weisenfluh won the Finlay South Junior (13-17 year-olds) Championship Race at the Charles River July 8.

Duncombe, 16, and Evans, 16, had sailed together to win the midget cup race three years ago. The midget cup race names the champions of the greater Boston area but the Finlay championships could be the springboard for this team to represent Massachusetts at Fort Worth, Texas.

Weisenfluh, a 15 year-old crew member, said, "We had a blast, that is all that counts. But we are still going to the Grey Cup race with the idea of winning."

Duncombe, Evans and Weisenfluh won the South Shore Division race with 17 points on a low point score scale. A younger Hingham Yacht Club team, Nicky Ullrich, 15, Dan Callahan, 13, and Rich Harries, 14, came in second with 30 points.

Ullrich explained "The first day of racing the winds were light. That did not help us because our crew is about 100 pounds lighter than the rest. We did better on the second day when the wind came up."

Other local competitors were the Scituate Yacht Club, the Hull Yacht Club, the Cohasset Sailing Club and the Hingham Lincoln Sailing Club.

Last year a crew from the Hull Yacht Club won. However, the Finlay trophy rested on the Duncombe shelf two years ago when Scott Duncombe and his crew won.

The Charles River Community Boating Club provided race boats that no one had sailed in before.

The race was run by boat rotation so that every crew used each boat in one race. The eight races were held July 7 and 8 for about 45 minutes each.

The two winning teams will sail in the Grey Cup Race against Central Mass. and North Shore champions July 18 and 19 in Manchester, N.H. The winner of this race will go to Texas.

Neither the Hingham nor the Cohasset crew have used the Rhodes 19 boats which will be used in the Grey Cub Race. However, they have seen half of their competition in action because the Central Massachusetts Gallagher race and the South Shore Finlay race were combined, but tallied separately.

The Cohasset team won three firsts, two seconds, two thirds and one fifth. The Hingham team earned four seconds, one fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh places.

The North Shore's teams remain a mystery to Central Mass. and the South Shore's teams.

"We'll give it our best shot," said crew member Evans. "I had only been teaching beginner sailing lessons this summer and not really improving myself, until the race came up. But it all came back to us when we were out there."

At the Paul Pratt Library

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites school-age children and their parents to a Family Story Hour on Monday, July 18 at 7:30 p.m. This is the second program in a series of five evening programs for family enjoyment.

JoAnne C. Norton, formerly Children's Librarian at the Norwell Public Library, will be this evening's guest storyteller. She will tell a group of "Tales of Revenge," which includes "The Magic Bridle," a folktale from Bosnia as well as a Native American tale entitled, "The Mountain Goats of Temle Ham."

Norton will also tell a much requested favorite, "The Elephant's Child," by Kipling.

Norton has performed extensively throughout the Boston area. She has participated in the Boston Globe Book Fair, the North River Art Society's festival, and she has planned her own story-telling festivals in Norwell. Her program will last approximately 45 minutes.

Children's Art Exhibit

A colorful new exhibit of children's art has been hung in the children's room of the library.

The display was selected by Jean O'Malley, art teacher for the Cohasset schools, and arranged by Carolyn Horn, children's art chairman for the Friends of the Library. Cut paper and chalk depict flowers, Cohasset Harbor and abstract design. This display will remain at the library until July 31.

Works by the following children is included. Kindergarten: Herbie Crehan, Jonathan Hislop, Dean Volungis, Jessica Jenkins, Trevor Cook, Jeremiah Stevenson, Erin Steimle, Megan Rhodes, Caitlin O'Leary, Scott Moe, Alexis Zerendow.

Grade 1: Gerht Lubitz, Jay Nothnagle, Lara Martin, Tyler Studds, Kathy Hanlon, Christa Annberg, Katie O'Connor, Joshua LeGere, Scott Theriault.

Grade 2: Mark St. Onge, Kate Barrett, Colby Lawrence, Alexandra Knox, Trisha Hunt, Stepenhen Cahil, Andrew Kuhn, Sarah Thompson.

Summer Reading Program

"Byte into a Good Book" is the theme of the Summer Reading Program at the library.

A twelve foot tall apple tree welcomes readers as they enter the children's room. The tree is decked with bright red apples, one for each participant. Golden "bytes" are attached to the apples for each ten books read by the student's reading level.

Reading cards to record the book read may be picked up at the library and must be endorsed by a parent. For every ten books read, participants will draw a rebus to solve. These picture puzzles are the creations of Marjorie Murphy's sixth grade library class at the Deer Hill School. Each puzzle can be solved by deducing the book title or character depicted.

After reading ten books, students may enter their titles into a computer which is on loan from the Cohasset School Department. A printout of titles read over the summer will be available to each participant.

Library volunteers will supervise computer use. The reading program will encourage students to not only keep their reading skills polished over the summer, but also introduce or reinforce computer skills taught in the schools.

Students who read twenty books may choose a paperback book as a gift of the Friends of the Library. All participants will also be presented with reading certificates of achievement in their classrooms in the fall.

Share a Classic

Summer activities in the children's room also include a new "Share a Classic" program Tuesday and Thursday afternoons at 4:15 which began July 5 for children grade three and up.

The first story will be "James and the Giant Peach" by Dahl and read by Linda Henderson. The next story to be shared is "The Wizard of Oz" by Frank Baum. Weezie Welz will be the reader of this old favorite. Programs begin at 4:15 p.m. sharp and last for approximately one hour.

Pre-school story hours are filled for the summer but registrations are being accepted for the fall series.

Friends of the Cohasset Library Meet

The following officers were elected at the annual meeting of the Friends of the Cohasset Library. They are Lucille McLoughlin, President; Joan Remington, Vice-President; Jane Goedecke, Secretary; June Hubbard, Treasurer; Ann Bowdoin; Lucia Woods; Shirley Marten; Thomas Williams; Rudolf Talbot, and Frederick Garrison.

President McLoughlin reported highlights of the year. The volunteer program provided 3,477 hours of service in the library, equal to two full-time employees or 25 percent of the paid staff. Major gifts to the library were $1,335 for family passes to the Museum of Fine Arts, Museum of Science, Children's Museum and the Aquarium; the outdoor book return box; $675 to the library book fund; and sponsorship of the summer reading incentive program which involved 127 children.

Major events were the annual book sale which raised $785, and the luncheon for volunteers in May.

Treasurer June Hubbard reported that expenditures of $3,904 exceeded income of $2,608. Membership dues represent less than half of the year's income, with book sales and special gifts making up the balance.

Trustee Chairman Dave Chittim pledged the support of the library trustees in the Friends' membership drive this fall.

Cohasset historical tours

The first of three Sunday afternoon walking tours to Cohasset's historic areas and sites will be held at 3 p.m. Sunday, July 17. Cohasset's Historical Society is the sponsor of the free tours, and the initial tour is titled "Pilgrimage to Cohasset's Past — The Common and the Village.

All those people interested in the history of this old New England town are invited to attend.

All three tours will meet at 3 p.m.

The July 17 tour meeting at the Town Common's old Meeting House, will feature Rev. Edward Atkinson of Cohasset's First Parish describe the history of the Meeting House, a 1747 building and once the seat of both government and religion in the town.

Historic District Commission member Charles Wheelwright will follow with a presentation about the history of the Town Common itself and some of the early buildings surrounding it.

The tour will finish at the Historical Society's museums at Cohasset Center, where Society Curator David Wadsworth will talk about the development of the village as a residential and commercial area.

The three museums: the Maritime, the Capt. John Wilson Historical House and the Independence Gown Museum will be open for display. Refreshments will be served.

Subsequent Sunday afternoon tours will feature an August 7 walk to historic Cohasset Harbor, once the site of the town's fishing and shipbuilding industries.

The group will meet at the Society's Lothrop House at 3 p.m., and Aug. 28 "A Resting Place and an Overview" group will meet at 3 p.m. at the Central Cemetary, North Main St., the location of the ancient "Burying Ground."

The three tours are a part of the Historical Society's 55th Anniversary celebration.

By Joan Pinkham

How do people dream up these clever household tips? Their novel ideas never fail to impress me, for while I'm dusting, my only thought is to get it over with, but it would seem that some women's thoughts turn to higher things such as using clean, squeeze-type ketchup and mustard containers for decorating cakes, for their spouts are great for writing and drawing with icing...if postage stamps are stuck together these humid days, put them in the freezer for about an hour, after which they can be separated...to deordorize your home quickly, simmer a cup of water and your favorite spice on the back burner of the kitchen stove...when your onions are so old they start to sprout, pot them as you would any plant and within a week or two, the green tips can be cut to use as chives...to relieve the pain of a bee sting, moisten the area and sprinkle with meat tenderizer. One of these gals who is always coming up with fresh and new ideas is Beatrice Comas who knows just what to do with all the garden tomatoes we're starting to reap. Besides making spaghetti sauce, she writes: "Like my English cousins I occasionally enjoy a hearty mixed grille for Sunday morning breakfast, but it's best of all with a broiled or baked tomato." Here's her family favorite.

BROILED TOMATOES WITH CRUMB TOPPING

Cut six firm tomatoes in half and spread cut side with 3/4 c. cracker crumbs
2 T minced onion
1/4 c. melted butter or oleo
Dash of salt and pepper

Another thing that has always puzzled me is where jokes originate and I certainly unearthed one source when tidying up a bookshelf the other day. A 1975 Old Farmer's Almanac had a page of "Quickies" so ancient we've all chuckled over them before. These vintage jokes went like this: "A gentleman remembers a lady's birthday, but not her age...nothing stretches slacks like snacks...the bathtub was invented in 1850 and the phone in 1875. In 1850 you could've sat in the tub without having the phone ring..." Enough of that. This recipe's origin is no mystery, for Barbara Herman says this cake is called simply

CRAZY CAKE

1½ c. sifted all-purpose flour
3 T cocoa
1 c. sugar
1 tsp. baking soda
1/2 tsp. salt
1 tsp. vinegar
1 tsp. vanilla
5 T salad oil
1 c. water

Sift first five ingredients into greased 8" square cake pan. Make three depressions in dry ingredients. Pour vinegar into one, vanilla into another, salad oil into the third. Pour water over all. Mix well, until smooth. Bake in 350 degree oven about 35 min. When cool, cut in squares and top with whipped cream, or vanilla ice cream and chocolate sauce. This cake has the texture of gingerbread.

And who do you suppose decreed that for those with birthdays between June 21 to July 22, Wednesdays are lucky days, Saturdays are unlucky and February and September their most successful months? Common sense tells me that we Moon People born under the Cancer sign can't possibly all be alike, yet I can never resist a peek at the daily horoscope in the evening paper. Well, perhaps some lucky Wednesday, I'll inherit a fortune and be able to afford the makings for this Old Farmer's Almanac

BAKED LOBSTER

1¼ lb. lobster per person
Cracker meal, onion, melted butter and garlic

Split lobster open on its underside. Lay flat upon cookie sheet. Spoon out the green. Discard the long black vein from green to tail. Spoon out and discard the inner head. Mix the green in plenty of cracker meal and bits of finely chopped onion into melted butter. Mix to consistency of heavy paste. Small amount of garlic may be added to "spiffy" the taste. Fill cavity with the mix. Place in 350-400 degree oven and bake for 20 to 30 min., until done. Place small dip dish of melted butter alongside each person, french fried potatoes, or potato chips and a tossed salad.

Bentley Bros. Circus under the stars

The Bentley Brothers Circus, the largest three-ring outdoor circus in North America is coming to Boston for three days this summer. Presented by Boston promoter John Cronin, The Bentley Bros. Circus will be at Boston University's Nickerson Field Saturday July 16 at 11 a.m., 3 p.m. and 7 p.m.; Sunday, July 17 at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m.; and Monday, July 18 at 3 p.m. and 7 p.m.

Widely considered to be among the top circus troupes in the world, The Bentley Bros. features a line-up of international entertainers second to none. Among the acts due at Nickerson Field this July will be Jorge Barretta's "Lords of the Wild," which pits one lone individual against a dozen of the world's most ferocious cats; Countess Natasha's spectacular sword act; the "Iron Jawed" gravity-defying Claudia Sisters; and Bucky Speele's internationally acclaimed astounding African elephants.

Unique among the major circus troupes touring today, the Bentley Bros. Circus performs out-of-doors, in the open air under the stars just like the circus of yesteryear. In what promises to be Boston's best summertime entertainment this year, promoter Cronin has scheduled performances that cater to every family's time-table. In addition, he has invited a number of local and national celebrities to serve as Guest Ringmaster and join in the traditional Circus Parade.

Tickets can be purchased at all major ticket outlets, Ticketron, Berklee Performance Center or by phone at 542-1700.

Newspaper's mail bundle of surprises

By Judy Gilman

One of the unmixed delights of the newspaper business is seeing what comes in the mail every day.

Like "resident" and "occupant," a paper gets a lot of throwaway material stuffed in its post office box — the divorce support groups in West Newton, the needleworkers' guild in New Bedford — that are of no particular local interest. There are the mailings from rabid political groups both left and right in the political spectrum who advocate every possible takeover, teardown and generally ridiculous notion one could entertain. There are the slickly-packaged promotional pieces from large trade associations and the like.

Upon reception of an envelope from a jewelers' association last Christmas, the mail-opener jested that the contents should include a diamond. Never say die — the envelope did, a miniscule chip to demonstrate the size of stones being sent through the mail (Genuine Diamond Earrings, $5) and therefore, the value of dealing with a reputable jeweler. Who else can claim to have gotten a diamond in their junk mail?

And there are the press releases from organizations far and wide that omit one piece of information, usually the date. There are a lot of Wednesdays at 10:30 a.m. to choose from.

The favorite press release of all time was an important piece of news from a major airline. What it was we never found out. The sheet of paper had evaded the best efforts of the copier and was blank.

But all those absurdities aside, a release this week from State Treasurer Robert Crane's office has some interesting possibilities in it.

The question at hand is an auction of abandoned property, left in a safe deposit box that's been inactive for more than seven years. The state puts on a good show of trundling the stuff around the Commonwealth to let the citizens see what it is they can bid on, culminating with the auction in the echoing confines of the State House's Gardner Auditorium.

On hold at O'Hare, a city of transients

By Lois Martin

"Because of air traffic," the sign says, "delays should be expected at O'Hare."

Fine, but they never said anything about residency. O'Hare's no airport. It's a city, or maybe a stockyard or a holding place for people who want more than anything to go somewhere else but can't.

An airline trip like the one I had last week is a humbling experience. It teaches you who is in control.

Nobody. No one, not even the gravely-voiced woman on the PA system is in charge at O'Hare. People who are abandoned there, orphans of the air, would give anything if someone were in charge. Tyranny, I thought now and then when I was stranded, might have been a distraction if not an improvement.

PATCHES

Probably because I don't get out a lot, the airport's infamy in gobbling up people, the O'Hare Triangle, surprised me. First leaving Logan was stalled. No sooner had my captain (who ought to do the PR for aging power plants) said the weather was swell, then he announced we couldn't go to Chicago because of violent thunderstorms.

So I got to visit Detroit for a couple hours. The rear of the terminal was charming and I began to feel I'd taken a lifelong lease in my seat.

My residency at O'Hare became effective because I'd missed a connecting flight by four hours. And I was also missing something else - luggage. I knew that was true when the glib airline desk worker gave me the "Okay" sign about my luggage, not to worry.

For the rest of the day I watched those tractor things as they pulled the little trains full of luggage. There was a moment I believed one of the drivers was wearing my sundress.

We became neighbors, those of us in the game gate all day. We swapped paperback books. We were all well read in the romantic/mystery novels because we bought them there and had plenty of time to read.

Babies have more endurance than other beings. Their parents have the least endurance. But there are positive aspects. I figured I'd walked into O'Hare at 3 p.m. with slack leg muscles that had atrophied during my visit in Detroit. But by 8 p.m., after walking the miles of concourses of which O'Hare is fond, I was ready for the decathalon.

Having bought the books and Fanny Farmer, I started buying postcards of Chicago, for goodness sake. I figured residents take interest in their hometowns and I shouldn't vote until I'd seen a picture of the municipal buildings.

While we were friendly to one another, sharing plights from no flights, some were less civil to anyone wearing an airline outfit. That happens in prisons, you know, the guards become objects of hostility. Thus when that computer board kept shifting its time to later and later at night, the populace grew more restless.

But we made it to boarding time. One man, whose day at the office must warrant stress pills, said the flight was overbooked from the day before.

When my turn came, I told the young woman I wanted the smoking, drinking and swearing section. She said, "Oh, you mean the cockpit."

Close enough. By accident, the nicest one of the day, I got in first class. There they have real linen, real glasses, and honest to goodness salt and pepper shakers. It was a grand flight because the lightening flashing outside never managed to hit the wings.

Once in Albuquerque I got a cab driver who was determined to find the address I gave him. He couldn't for three-quarters of an hour so he bought a street map at a Texaco station.

So a trip doesn't mean merely going from one place to another. It has promise of an education. And one of the things I learned was that I should try to sit next to someone who wears my size whenever I have to go to O'Hare again.

Auto insurance reform puts onus on bad drivers

By Jane Lane

Legislation aimed at "making the entire auto insurance system more responsible," was signed into law last week by Gov. Michael Dukakis.

The legislation was sponsored by Plymouth and Norfolk County Sen. Allan McKinnon, who has attempted for two years to get some form of auto insurance reform on the books. The chairman of the Legislative Insurance Committee unsuccessfully filed a bill last year and earlier this year, the core of which comprises the bill recently passed by the House and Senate.

The thrust of the legislation is that repeated "at-fault accident" drivers, and drivers who have committed insurance fraud, or auto theft, will pay higher premiums. After years of studying this issue, McKinnon learned that between 15 and 20 percent of Massachusetts drivers cause over half of all accidents, and incidents of fraud and auto theft.

"The legislation is aimed at those who have abused the auto insurance system — it will deter them because they will have to pay heavily for those actions," McKinnon said.

These "bad drivers," who in the past have caused excessively high insurance rates, may also be denied optional auto insurance coverage, such as collision, theft and fire.

The bill, which became law last week, will actually take effect after Jan. 1. The insurance commissioner will still retain authority for fixing and establishing insurance rates, McKinnon noted. But this law will aid in reducing the number of flaws, and shift the cost of higher premiums to the bad divers — "those who have caused the excessive insurance costs," he added.

The Weymouth Democrat has been a member of the legislative insurance committee for the past three years. Since that time, he has attempted to revise the content of the auto insurance system.

"I've had this idea to make the insurance system a more responsible system. But because of a number of competing interest groups, it was difficult to get a consensus. The original bill went through many changes although the primary objective is still there. And this bill had the support of insurance company associations, agents' associations, Mass PIRG and Fair Share, and the secretary of Consumer Affairs. This legislation is close to the original bill I filed. I think it is meaningful and makes some fairly strong improvements to the insurance system," he said.

"The thrust of this legislation is to put the onus on the bad driver. People repeatedly responsible for at-fault accidents and other types of irresponsible driving, such as insurance fraud, and vehicular homicide, will have to pay heavily into this new system. And if they continue, there may be a chance that optional insurance coverage will not be available to them," he added.

The 13-year veteran of the state senate said there will also be a provision within the insurance reform bill which requires all insurance applicants to correctly file their insurance forms. Because inexperienced drivers, and repeatedly irresponsible drivers have to pay higher premiums, there may be a tendency for heads of households not to list all drivers of the insured vehicle. If the head of the household fails to list all possible drivers, when an accident occurs involving the uninsured driver, that driver will be unable to collect on himself, McKinnon explained.

This provision will place pressure on all insurance applicants to be honest when filing a policy. Currently, the state is losing between $6 and $8 million in insurance premiums from people who omit listing those persons who have to pay higher premiums, McKinnon said.

"This legislation is something I have felt very strongly about for many years," he said. "And I wondered if I would ever get it through the legislature. It is just not an easy thing to get all these conflicting points of view together. It was a compromise to get something done, but it is a substantial change in the system."

Service League intern program

"Learning through Experience" is the aim of a new summer program for Cohasset youths to help them make career decisions before they go to college.

Designed by the Social Service League of Cohasset and co-sponsored by the CHS Guidance Department, the summer intern program places juniors and seniors in "jobs" in the fields of their choice and interest for a two-week period, followed by evaluation of the experience by both student intern and his or her "employer."

The placement requires careful selection of students, matching a student to an organization where the youth can get the widest and most useful exposure to a chosen field, specific assigned tasks, and regular communication between placement sponsor and intern.

The student does not receive payment for the two week placement but the experience will duplicate actual employment.

Response to this concept has been extremely enthusiastic among area employers in fields ranging from advertising to Veterinary Medicine.
ments are flexible in time, depending on the employer's schedule.

Ten students have been interviewed and selected to work in these areas:

Matthew Donnelly, advertising, Norfolk Partners, Ltd. Boston; Lisa Pierotti, social services, "Friend to Friend," Hull; Jackie Plante, radiology, Driftway Radiology, Scituate; Mason Sandell, Medicine, Boston City Hospital, one week, Brockton Hospital, one week; Tracy Fitzpatrick, Pediatrics- David Maltz, M.D. Cohasset; Debbie Soltesz, Interior Design, creations Philip Smith, Cohasset; Kirsty Munro, veterinary medicine, Kearns Animal Hospital Clinic, Hingham; Heidi Hublitz, architecture, James Sandell, Boston and Carla Lucas, special education, Braintree Mini-School.

Many of those approached by the Social Service League committee members noted that they wished such a program had been available to them when they were still undecided about careers.

Thirty-two employers offered intern positions to the program. Some of them are: florist; carpentry; food retailing; auto mechanics; dentistry; plumbing; stock investment; insurance; museum work; and others.

Not all of these and other fields have been filled, and placements are still available for August. Application forms are available at the Social Service League Office in St. Stephens Church Hall (383-0771 from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. daily.)

The first "wave" of placements is alredy set for July, beginning on July 6 and ending July 20. Some place-

Plaza sidewalk sale

A Cushing Plaza Sidewalk Sale will be held Friday, July 22, and Saturday, July 23, will all plaza stores participating.

Plaza merchants met recently to discuss promotions and ways to increase business at the plaza.

Some ideas included special events, music, art exhibits and hot air balloons in the parking lot.

Merchants decided a sidewalk sale would be desireable as a first join effort.

Carl Zajac of Medi Mart suggested the Coca Cola robot be scheduled if possible, and he was to make the inquiry.

Dave Santiano of Mister Donut suggested that he could obtain the services of a clown with balloons for the two-day sale.

Dave Richardson of Corner Meat Shop will call a hot dog supplier and will provide low-priced hot dogs on the sidewalk during the two days of the sale.

It was also agreed merchants would attempt to get Coca Cola to pick up a part of the advertising.

Merchants agreed that the tenants and Cushing Plaza would share jointly in the remaining costs of advertising and promotion. It was agreed the budget for this event would not be large or burdensome so that all stores could comfortably participate.

It was further agreed that a temporary sign advertising the event would be produced and placed out front on Route 3A and that all tenants would be asked to mention the event in any advertising they may be doing between now and July 22 and 23.

Plaza Manager Joe Quinn will try to call one of the Boston Bruins team members who lives in the Cohasset-Scituate area to be at the sale.

Signs will be made up for distribution to each of the stores so store-owners will place them in windows, etc., and thus promote the event.

Garden Club meeting

The Cohasset Garden Club met recently at the Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum.

Mrs. John C. Crandell and Mrs. John F. Howe were hostesses for the afternoon. Members were served punch and pastries in the courtyard and members enjoyed the gardens which are maintained by the club.

President, Mrs. Higginson McVeigh, introduced Mrs. E. Lawrence Parker, President of the Cohasset Historical Society, who welcomed the members and thanked them for their many hours of work.

Program Chairman, Mrs. John L. Kornet, presented Mrs. Robert C. Knowles, a long time member of the Club and an active participant in the Garden Club of America and the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. In addition she was the "guiding light" in the development of the garden.

Following her talk, David Wadsworth, Senior Curator of the Museums gave some highlights of Cohasset history and origins of the Historical Society.

At the end of the meeting, Mrs. Parker and Mr. Wadsworth invited all the members to tour the three buildings.

The Cohasset Garden Club, a member of the Garden Club of America and the Massachusetts Federation of Garden Clubs, designed these gardens twenty-four years ago and members have been responsible for their maintenance since that time.

Garden Club scholarship

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset is offering an annual scholarship to include college undergraduates.

A scholarship of at least $500 will be awarded to any Cohasset student now enrolled or anticipating enrollment in a course of study of the environmental sciences in its widest aspect.

Those applying are asked to write a short essay detailing their experience and interests and how they plan to pursue their goals.

After applications are reviewed, candidates will be contacted and an interview arranged.

The award will be sent directly to the college where the student is enrolled.

Applications are available by calling Marge Libby, 5 Woodland Drive.

Reprimand of Studds draws mixed reviews

By Lois Martin

"The reprimand should come from his constituents,' she said. "He owes an apology to us."

That was one woman's opinion late last week after she, like the rest of the nation, learned her U.S. Congressman was in line for a reprimand from colleagues in the House.

U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds now serving his sixth term in Congress after winning undiluted reaffirmation from voters last November has been cited by the House Ethics Committee for an incident with a page 10 years ago.

Studds, said the committee in recommending reprimand, had a sexual relationship with a 17 year-old male page in 1973. He is also accused of having approached two other male pages for sex at that time. Within the last five days news stories have carried part of the investigative report and the details of the relationship of Studds and the 17 year-old.

Also reported in full was Studds' statement before Congress in which he said he was gay. He also said that his relationship was one between two consenting adults.

The revelation before Congress of his homosexuality has not caused great surprise in this portion of his District. Neither has it, according to people with whom the Mariner spoke, caused especial alarm.

There are those who want the Congressman to leave office immediately. But a scant majority of people, interviewed at random, said he should stay in office. A number of people said they couldn't decide whether he should leave now or if they'd ever vote for him again.

The basic issue for those who wanted him to leave was that he sought sexual satisfaction with a teenager. Studds was about 36 at that time. The law in Washington, D.C. says a 16 year-old is an adult.

Those who wish him to continue as representative of the District said his record was such that a 10 year-old incident ought not negate it.

But some did not equivocate nor did they find solace in Studds' record.

"I'm rather old-fashioned about this idea,' said one man. "I find it difficult to accept. Frankly it makes me sick. If I had to vote for him right now, I wouldn't, regardless of his record."

A stalwart Studds supporter had this to say: "I'm disappointed. I think it's my fault to be disappointed because in New England we're incredible optimists. We think the next politician or the next movie star or the next athlete is going to be the perfect person. Only an optimist would believe in the Red Sox."

"I definitely believe he should finish his term. I don't

School Committee retains Coach Minelli

Ed Minelli will still be the Cohasset High School varsity basketball coach for the 1983-84 season.

The School Committee, by virtue of a 4-0 vote, overruled the earlier recommendations of the school superintendent, high school principal and athletic director and reappointed Minelli to a one-year contract.

The committee was informed by School Supt. Eugene Crowell that the other applicant, high school teacher Ken Cisneros, withdrew his application by virtue of a letter to administrators.

Contents of the letter were not released by Crowell.

A month ago, High School Principal Dick Streeter said Minelli was not teaching sufficient fundamental basketball despite improving the team's record in two years from 1-17 to a 10-10 record.

In addition, both Crowell and Streeter feel CHS should have coaches who are also academic instructors at the high school.

At the July 20 meeting, although the matter of basketball coach was postponed from a previous meeting, it was not posted on the committee agenda as "old business."

Before the committee adjourned into executive

A conversation with Selectman Mary Jane McArthur

By Jane Lane

She describes herself as a "joiner and a doer." With that simple explanation, selectmen chairman Mary Jane McArthur reveals why she has devoted a great portion of her life to her community.

She came here with her husband, Earl, almost 30 years ago. Born and raised in Woodland, Maine, near the Canadian border, Mary Jane has always preferred small town living to an urban existence.

She was immediately attracted to this seacoast community, and soon learned to love the people and places that mold this town she finds very special.

Her interests are many and Cohasset is to her, a haven for her longtime hobbies. It is a town seeped in historical tradition and for Mary Jane, that is just another advantage to living here. She is an avid amateur historian, loves antiques, devours historical novels, and is an officer of the Historic Trust and a member of the Historical Society. It is only appropriate that her home, situated across Elm Street from the police and fire stations, is a white clapboard antique Cape, restored and decorated with touches of natural when the stickers are given out, and get suggestions for improving our service to the community. We have to look at the revenue generated and come up with a figure we need to generate the same revenue for next year," she explains.

Although she does not observe any "glaring problems" with this community, Mary Jane states that change is often good. Not change just for the sake of change, she emphasizes, but the town must be cognizant of technological advances which will aid the community in this complex age.

"Our responsibility is to look into these changes and improve the service to the community and make town government more efficient and cost effective," she adds.

The only current board member who was a member of the previous three-member selectmen board with Mary Jane is Rocco Laugelle.

Although she is now a strong supporter of the five member board, Mary Jane acknowledges that the previous board ,"had a lot of differences of opinions but it was a worthwhile experience.

Although she is an eager participant and observer of town politics, Mary Jane is aware that "doers," are a different breed.

"It takes a special type of person to run for public office and open himself to the public," she said. "When I ran I had no axe to grind. There was no outstanding reason why I chose to run. I have always been interested."

She eagerly interjects, "It is not an ego thing with me. I would just like to contribute. If I have some particular background or expertise, then I enjoy contributing that to the town."

Although she has been involved in town government for more than 20 years, Mary Jane has not tired. It is, she rationalizes, fun and a challenge for her.

"I've seen some very good things happen for Cohasset the last few months, such as the written policies and procedures, which will lead to good government," she notes.

The town official sincerely believes the town is well-managed and the selectmen " are exerting the role of leadership, and are involved in the leadership of this community, which we should be."

Although she rarely finds the time to escape from her municipal duties, Mary Jane manages to vacation away from Cohasset.

Upon her return, she feels invigorated, and prepared to face challenges with a fresh perspective.

She will be leaving next week to embark on a three-week tour of Europe with daughter, Kati. Although she is eager to travel on unknown terrain, she is just as anxious to return home and confront more local concerns.

Cohasset's week . . .

Clarification

Venetia Roebuck of 312 Beechwood Street denied any leakage from her septic tank was going "into the brook", as Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos said in a previous report to the Board of Health.

Roebuck told the board any leakage had gone "into a low or marshy area." According to the assessors' map, Roebuck's house is approximately 550 feet from Bound Brook. The brook flows away from, and not toward the reservoir, Lily Pond, Roebuck stressed.

Mariner Reporter Patricia Anne Walsh confirmed that Eliopoulos made the statement concerning the septic tank although Eliopoulos said she didn't make the comment.

Beach testing

The Board of Health resumed beach testing beginning July 1. Black Rock Beach, Sandy Beach, Bassing Beach and other random areas will be checked routinely. Any testing which reveals unsafe swimming levels will be posted on the bulletin board at the Town Hall, as well as printed in the newspaper. In addition, the beach will be posted, "Keep Out — Water Polluted, Per Order Board of Health."

Please feel free to call the Board of Health for questions about the testing program.

Historic District election

Seven out of nine members of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission are new appointees. As a result the commission will hold its organizational meeting and election of officers August 2.

The Commission plans to hold meetings the first Tuesday of every month. A July 12 organization meeting members drafted a letter to be sent to all residents of the district with the commission bylaws.

Residents who are not members of the commission will be invited to return postcards signifying if they wish to be sent notifications of all meetings.

Murphy requests discussion

Developer John Murphy, of M & R Associates, Hingham, has requested a special meeting the with Board of Health to discuss the board's treatment of engineers and developers.

Murphy, of Cohasset, said he could not discuss the matter and lot development sufficiently in the 15 minutes alloted to him. Board members said they would allot him 45 minutes in September.

Murphy said, "We want to discuss the relationship between developers and engineers and the kind of authority the Health Board exercises in enforcement procedures."

School Personnel actions

The School Committee approved the following personnel actions. Submitting resignations were Richard Ainslie, utility man, and Janet Willis high school math aide. Appointed were Ruth Muir, special education teacher at the Osgood School and Gail Civali, special education teacher at the high school. Coaches appointed included Ed Minelli, boys basketball head coach, Joseph Bouchard, subvarsity baseball coach and Thomas Burnell, varsity baseball and ice hockey head coaches The committee decided to readvertise the head field hockey coaching position.

School Computer Update

Report cards should be sent home quicker than in past years because the School Dept. has a new computer, School Supt. Eugene Crowell reported to the School Committee last week. Also expected to be on the computer are attendance and scheduling records. Elementary school report cards will still be done by hand because he feels the teachers' handwritten evaluations are a better indicator of a student's work level.

New Cohasset Village store

A former shoestore but now vacant storefront ,next to the Cohasset Colonial Village, won't be vacant much longer. Atty. John Whitton, owner of Ebeneezer's Ice Cream and Bakery of Country Way, No. Scituate, said he has received preliminary approval from the Cohasset Sewer Commission for a sewer permit. If the balance of the town permits are approved, the store should be opening by Labor Day. Whitton said already many Cohasset residents travel to the No. Scituate store so he expects his store will draw a large customer draw from Cohasset. Whitton described his store as carrying a full load of ice cream, deli, bakery and a fresh garden, fruit and salad bar.

Whitton expects the store will be open from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m., seven days a week. Whitton also owns Ebeneezer's in Salem and he will open a new store in Duxbury this weekend.

School Dept. 'in black'

School Supt. Eugene Crowell told the School Committee last week the 1982-83 fiscal year finished the budget year "in the black" meaning there won't be additional funds needed to pay any School Dept. bills Crowell said it was an accomplishment because the department began the year with a nearly $20,000 shortfall of computer bills. and required teacher salary bills (both non-budgeted items). In addition $186,064 was transferred by the committee to different school accounts to balance the financial books.

Crowell also announced there will be a beginning revolving account of $8,000 for the Athletic Dept. Crowell also praised several town departments including Tree and Park Supervisor Peter Laugelle for helping the School Dept. to save money, especially during last few months.

MDC shutdown started with Cohasset

Cohasset, Hull, Hanson, Norwell and other South Shore towns, were ordered by the MDC not to dump sewage or septic tank wastes into the MDC sewer lines.

The MDC could not afford to allow the practice since the agency is being sued for millions of dollars, because of the practice of frequent dumping of sewage from trunk lines and facilities into the ocean.

It all started with Cohasset.

A local business (who has asked their name not be publicized) sought to expand their operations. The expansion would result in a small increase in "grey water" wth soap (as distinguished from "black water" from toilets).

Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos gave the owner a list of conditions which must be met within 10 days.

The owner says Eliopoulos said the company must have written permission from their hauler, Marguette & Sons, as well as from the MDC.

The owner called the MDC in Boston shortly before the deadline, to insure the MDC letter would arrive in time.

"The man told me, 'we are sending you an answer, but I'm afraid it will not be what you want to hear. We have suspected that Cohasset was dumping septage in the MDC lines, but now we have proof!' ", the owner said recently.

May 5, the MDC notified the owner as well as Cohasset officials that they would not allow the dumping of any Cohasset septage into the MDC lines, which is reserved for the 43 member towns and cities. The only exception would be if a community were under contract to the MDC.

Several subsequent letters of warning were sent to Cohasset and Hingham officials. After further investigation, the MDC banned several towns from dumping sewage in their lines.

Reprimand of Studds draws mixed reviews know if he should run again but I'd like to see him run again because I like him. What he did is not forgiveable but it's not bad enough for him to leave his job."

Another resident pointed out that if there are, as some calculators say, 10 per cent homosexuals in the population, one should expect some of them to be in Congress, about 40 of them.

"He's been a good Congressman," said a doctor. "I think he should run for reelection on the merits of what he's done in the past. I hope he's learned his lesson."

But from the opposite perspective came these remarks from a couple who share sentiments: "I have such little faith in the political system," she said. "My husband and I feel he should resign. I couldn't care less about his being a homosexual. He's done a good job. But when a man, and he was 36 or 37, has to deal with a kid for sexual satisfaction, he has some kind of character problem. We take exception to calling it an 'adult-consent relationship.' Anyone who's raised kids knows they're not adults at 16 or 17. They're prone to adults. It was a breaking of a trust with the page system. Atrocious. A serious lack of judgment, a character need or flaw. He has no right to be in public office if he doesn't understand he's setting himself up for blackmail.

"If he'd had an affair with a 30 year old guy, I couldn't care less. The age factor is serious. And I'm horrified that some people seem to be saying, "So what?" "

"I think he should be out of office," said another constituent. "It's not because he's a homosexual. That's personal. But we don't need this in our politician."

One man said he had mixed feelings about whether he'd vote for Studds again. "My feeling of concern is that he used a young person. I just don't have a grip on whether or not I'd vote for him today. He obviously represented people well. There's no complaint there...but."

One woman, an exception among those called, said she never liked him anyway, never voted for him, never would..."I think he should resign. He should not be representing the people."

And another, who admittedly has a problem finding homosexuality acceptable, said she still had to look at his record but wondered if he was in a position to do his best work, given the public response to the relationship with the page.

Two people, a male and a female, found little merit in the revelation of the liaison 10 years ago:

"I think if the man's good at his job, what the hell," said one man, "let him stay there."

"I think this is ludicrous," said the woman. "This has nothing to do with his performance in Congress. It was not during working hours and he didn't use the taxpayer's money. Who cares?"

"This is absolutely disgusting," said one woman. "God gave us an example of what man should be. If this type of man is leading our country, God knows where we'll end up. There are too many micey men and sick people running the country. It's time to put men in office."

"It's rather scandalous," said one woman quietly. "I think he should resign."

Another voter said the incident brought to mind the novel, "Advise & Consent," and its reference to that "tired old sin."

"The fact that he did it with a page when he had Congressional influence, as an employer, that was wrong," he said. "If it had been with someone outside the Congressional organization, that is his own business. He can be much more highly criticized for his lifestyle but for the fact that it was 10 years ago and it's unfair to bring up history of a crime 10 years ago.

"Now he's more mature, has more common sense to keep the fun and games outside Congressional boundaries. The crime was 10 years ago and he's not as foolish as he was."

Although people measured the impact of the incident, and in some cases identified with it as a parent of a teenager, most still gave weight to what they consider to be a solid representation of his District.

The detracting aspect, save for one person, was the abuse of a teenager for sexual purposes.

session, Crowell informed the committee Cisneros withdrew his application.

Crowell said there were no other applicants for the position and the committee then voted to reappoint Minelli.

After the meeting, Minelli shook each committee member's hand and said, "Thank you." A letter of public appreciation written by Minelli is on Mariner's page 9.

Committee members voting included Chairman Dick Conley, Martha Gjesteby, Joe Nedrow and Diana Kornet. Member Jack Langmaid was absent from the meeting.

Magazine solicitors under observation

Cohasset police have joined forces with Hingham police to pull the welcome mat out from under a group of out-of-state magazine solicitors.

In Hingham, calls from residents complaining of harassment flooded the police station.

Cohasset Police Chief Joseph Kealey confirmed the group has been working in Cohasset.

According to the Hingham police log, Hingham Police Chief William Cushing revoked the license of American Community Services, Inc. until he could talk to manager Edward Scott.

But Cushing said recently that he had had no conversation with Scott, who apparently preferred to leave Hingham.

More than two dozen residents made specific complaints about the solicitors between Tuesday, July 5 and Saturday, July 9. When the Mariner contacted some residents who had called the station, they told similar stories.

In many cases, they said, the solicitors did not state their business at the outset. "I kept asking him what it was he was selling," a Main Street, Hingham resident said Tuesday. "He wouldn't get to the point. First he said his family had just moved into the neighborhood and wanted to meet the neighbors. Then he admitted that wasn't true and asked if we were interested in adopting a black child for the summer."

An Arnold Road, Hingham resident said the salesmen were pushy. "When someone puts their foot between your screen door and your inner door, I call that pushy," she said. She had been called on three times by different solicitors in the group, including one solicitor who approached through a neighbor's backyard and joined the family on the sundeck. "I just found it very annoying," she added.

"The solicitor who came to see us had an answer for every argument," the Main Street resident said. "He said he lived by the three Bs: brief, brilliant and bye-bye. But I coulnd't see that there was any point to the spiel. When I finally told him we were late in having dinner, he said he'd be back. But he still hadn't said what he was selling.

A Hersey Street, Hingham resident said she tried politely three times to get rid of the solicitor who came to the door. "He was very smooth. He called me by my name. I should have asked for identification but I didn't think of it. I do think it's something the police department should require, though. Finally my dog came running out of nowhere, and sat right down next to me at the door, growling. Finally he (the solicitor) left."

American Community Services, Inc.'s activities last fall under the jurisdiction of interstate commerce and the U.S. Code, Chief Cushing says. "There is no way to ban this type of soliciting. They must register at the police station and supply a list of names of their workers (there were 11 working in Hingham), but you can't keep them out. It's been tested in court several times."

Unlike other forms of licensing, the board of selectmen does not have the authority over this type of solicitation which does qualify as interstate commerce.

Cohasset's Kealey said his officers have received some complaints.

He has some advice for Cohasset residents if they are bothered by the group.

"If their behavior is rude and you do not want to purchase what they are selling, say 'No, thank you.' If they persist, call us and we will remove them from your house."

"There is no need for citizens to be intimidated by this group."

When the Mariner called American Community's home office in Michigan City, Ind., the unidentified woman who answered the call refused to disclose any information about the company. She asked that any information be sought by letter addressed to Edward Scott, office manager. She added, however, that Scott was not available to comment on the phone.

☐The Boston Red Sox may not be doing well but Cohasset has its very own Red Sox team that is a great group of winners! The Red Sox, coached by Jim Gallagher, managed to go through the whole season undefeated, 18 wins, and the team scored 210 runs!) The team batting average was a combined 1,327, the pitchers struck out 137 batters, and the fielding average was .897.

On his days off Dr. Barlow may be found at the nearest beach, soaking up the sun and swimming in the ocean, something he sure missed while he was in Chicago.

☐I'll bet Jim Benbow will be happy to get back to the college life. Jim may be spotted on his way to work at 7 a.m. every morning, looking just a bit weary (even classes don't start that early).

☐Saw Elaine Hubbell recently, with a grandchild holding each of her hands, looking as happy as any grandmother I've ever seen.

☐Congratulations to Martha Gjesteby, who was elected to the Executive Committee of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council at their recent meeting.

☐Anyone driving by Lambert's Lane last weekend saw a sample of Barbara Power's artistry in flower arranging...her talent is such that she gets "rave reviews" with every bouquet that she makes.

State issues warning on low income housing

Cohasset and Hanover officials were invited to a special meeting with state representatives to discuss a required low income family plan.

But no one from Cohasset attended the Hanover meeting.

Mariner reporter Judy Foley attended and this is her account of what the state policy concerning low income family planning means to committies.

Hanover was not denied funds for the King Street industrial area because of restrictive housing opportunities in the town, but future funding could be at stake if progress isn't made to provide housing for low income families, town officials learned this week.

The selectmen met with two officials from the Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD), State Rep. William Flynn of Hanover, and members of the Hanover Housing Authority Monday to clear up confusion over a recent notice that the town may be "unreasonably restrictive" in its housing opportunities for low income families.

Town officials from Cohasset and other nearby communities which received the same notice were also invited but did not attend the meeting. About 25 towns have been notified in the past six months that discretionary funds may be held up by the EOCD because of restrictive housing policies.

State Senator Anna Buckley was also invited but was unable to attend, although selectman chairman Frederick Briggs lauded the senator for clearing up many questions on the housing issue. "She did a tremendous amount of work on our behalf in the EOCD situation," Briggs said.

According to Marc Draisen of the EOCD housing division, the state has not denied any funds based on Executive Order No. 214, an executive decree to withhold all discretionary funds to communities deemed to be restrictive in low cost housing opportunities.

But the issue could hold up future grant monies to the town, he said.

"Hanover may well be unreasonably restrictive," he warned, " and future funds may be a problem when that is taken into consideration. Our desire is to work with the town and try to solve the problem. But that process has barely begun, and the grant was denied on the application alone."

The EOCD's housing division notified the selectmen that the town could lose future funding because of the housing issue May 19, just three days after the agency's development division informed the town that a Small Cities grant application for the industrial area was denied, causing some confusion over whether or not the application was turned down because of the housing issue.

Draisen said the grant was denied "soley on the basis of the quality of the application," and that the application triggered the housing review after it had been rejected.

He said Executive Order No. 214 was designed "with the notion that no single one community in the Commonwealth fulfilled the need to provide housing for low income families. There are regional needs, and it's our hope that towns take their fair share of that need." He added that local communities now have some power to give residents priority in low cost housing applications.

"The most important thing is to see some positive movement in that direction," he said. "We don't think it's healthy to create high density, high rise housing soley for families. We emphasise scattered site housing, single and duplex dwellings and small developments of five to ten units."

He said the town could look into a partnership with a private developer to hold a segment of housing units for low income families, and noted a recent proposal by Gov. Dukakis would provide interest write-downs to developers who leave 25 percent of a development for low and moderate cost housing.

He also suggested the town look into zoning changes to permit multi-family or accessory housing units.

"The hard bottom line has to show some movement to increase the number of units available."

PAST EFFORTS ON HOUSING CITED

Local officials took strong exception to the EOCD ruling that Hanover was considered "restrictive."

Briggs noted that the housing authority has constantly applied for funds for low cost housing over the past nine years. "What position will your agency take on future requests," he asked Draisen.

Briggs said Hanover lost an anti-snob zoning case before the state Supreme Court several years ago and he feels the town has been discriminated against because of the previous ruling.

He said the town denied a large development in Hanover because of sewerage problems on the property, and subsequently lost the case when the developer took the issue to court. The development was eventually denied by the state because of sewerage problems, he said.

Draisen was unaware of the court case but replied, "Essentially it doesn't matter. It's how you move from this point forward."

He said the state is asking the town to demonstrate some course of action to increase housing opportunites. The town could sign an agreement with EOCD on a timetable to implement the plan, he said. "The town would be monitored, but discretionary funds could proceed in that time."

Selectman Janet O'Brien was concerned that some new movement was beneath the new executive order.

"The housing authority has shown good faith efforts," she argued.

"You can anticipate funding, but you can never be certain. It seems that if an application is put forward it should constitute at least an indication that this community is attempting to fulfill its needs locally," she said. "The housing authority has tried repeatedly, and we've

Editorial

The Studds Case

This is an editorial we hoped would never have to be written. A brilliant Congressman, at the zenith of his vigor, intellect and influence, has had his political career threatened with annihilation because of the surfacing of a ten year-old homosexual indiscretion.

Thus Congressman Gerry Studds sees his intimate life plastered all over the media. He sees his fate bandied about in sudden, superficial straw polls by that branch of the entertainment industry known as television. He reads the fulminations of the sensational press, which can't get off its morally vacuous posterior fast enough to demand his immediate resignation.

Somehow the heartless but expeditious "thumbs down" by which the Roman gladiator learned his fate seems more enlightened spectacle than that by which this civilization discusses a moral issue and a man's fate.

If ever an issue needed thought rather than emotion and sensation, this one does. We shall therefore endeavor in a difficult editorial that it falls to our duty to write, to shed what reason we can as we share our thoughts.

We believe, first, that except in the broader context of how America may ultimately respond differently to the identical and simultaneously exposed heterosexual indiscretion of an Illinois Congressman, homosexuality is not here the issue.

Some of us at the Mariner have known for several years that Gerry Studds is "gay." We didn't bring it up at the Mariner or in the Mariner because it seemed patently clear that it was neither the public's business nor was it pertinent to Studds' performance in office, a performance that in our view has ranked somewhere in the top ten among the 435 members of Congress since the first day he entered office.

In our view, the world is not made decent or the nation strong when homosexuality is harassed or when society deprives itself ipso facto of the labors of a brilliant public servant like Gerry Studds.

There are of course among Studds' constituents those who hold a less benign view of homosexuality than do we, and those views will be part of the judgment that is rendered if, as he firmly states he intends to do, Studds seeks reelection in 1984.

So much for what we believe is the non-issue of homosexuality. The real issue, we believe, is abuse of power. Studds will not like to hear this, but in that strange year of 1973, he was wrong in a similar way to the way Richard Nixon was wrong: he abused the public trust of his great power.

It is as simple as this. In the social system of Congress, the Congressman sits at the pinnacle. Congressmen have great influence wherever they go, but in the halls of Congress they are royalty itself.

Pages, on the other hand, are high school students plucked from school districts around the country. They go to Washington for a year as very junior employees of Congress, and they are subject to the care and protection of Congress and of the Congressmen who sponsor them.

There is simply no way that an adolescent under such circumstances can have a sexual relationship with a member of Congress that is truly "mutual and voluntary," as Studds has described the relationship he entered into in 1973. The power difference is too enormously great, and so is the age difference. Coercion is implicit in any such sexual relationship — just as it is

A wreck is a wreck, right?

By Claire McDonough

Skunked again. Why do other people always think up wonderful ideas just before I do? Like "Rent-a-Kvetch." I'd be great at nagging people for profit, and it would be for their own good, too.

Now it's "Rent-a-Wreck." Seems some company will rent less than perfect used cars at less than usual prices. Since they're neither # one, two, nor three, they don't feel they have to try at all.

Swell. Only I could do it so much better. There's the Duster in the driveway, for example. Two flat tires. No muffler. Deiseling that won't quit and a carburator that did. Brakes that squeak when they aren't in use. I mean, we're talking wreck.

Then there's Jay's Scout. He bought it with the wild ambition of converting it to something else. A submarine, I think. It sits mouldering somewhere. I prefer not to think where. Give me a call. I'll deal.

We aren't limited to cars, either. I mean, a wreck is a wreck, right?

Could I interest you in a TV that only brings in citizen band radios? How about five plates (one cracked) that don't match anything else?

No? Well, listen, I have four perfectly good used kittens. You don't even have to return them. As a matter of fact, as soon as you take them, I plan to move.

Maybe a living room rug? Lime green shag, and you could probably put furniture over the stains.

A supermarket encyclopedia, circa 1972, with only four volumes missing?

How about a rowboat that leaks or a moped with a blown exhaust pipe? You can get parts if you're willing to travel.

I'll rent you a lawn mower cheap. It's very loud, and it'll do anything but cut grass.

We also have a great looking electric can opener. It will open cans half-way and if you bend the lid back you can probably get the contents out. It's only a real problem when you're dealing with cat food and the cat gets it's head in the half opening. Let me point out again that I'm willing to throw in a cat. And a sizeable supply of partially opened cans of cat food.

I told the Dragon about my idea, and for once he was supportive.

"How about all those unstrung tennis and badminton rackets?" he asked.

"Or that flannel bathrobe you've had since you were in college? You also have 5,927 paperback books. You could rent them out. And the electric hair rollers you never use. And the clothes you haven't been able to fit into for ten years?"

I became defensive. "Some day I may find time for tennis again. That bathrobe is the most comfortable, comforting thing I own. I want to re-read some of those books. And if I let my hair grown and lose weight I can use the rollers and the clothes. Why don't you rent out something of yours? You certainly must have a useless broken-down wreck hanging around the house that you could rent."

"Yeah," he admitted. "I did give the matter some thought. But I decided I love you too much, after all."

In support of Studds

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee supports and has the greatest respect for Gerry Studd's 10½ year service as our congressman.

He has consistently done an excellent job as a congressman in representing the people of his District in legislative and constituent services.

A congressional committee has recommended that Gerry Studds be reprimanded. We agree with his decision to accept this action.

We hope that the incident that prompted the reprimand will not, in an otherwise highly exemplary career, overshadow the qualifications, the commitment, the professionalism, and the excellence that Gerry Studds has brought to the United States Congress.

We believe that Gerry Studds, who has made a courageous public statement, should not resign his position, and should fill out his full term of office. We hope that Congressman Studds will seek another term of office in Congress and that the voters of the 10th Congressional District will consider his entire record when they vote.

Happy Newspaper...

To the Editor:

I'm enjoying our subscription to the Mariner very much. It is such a happy newspaper. In today's world that's an event in and of itself. You are so positive and constructive in what you report and write.

I was tremendously impressed with the editorial about the high school basketball coach.

You seemed to present all the facts clearly, especially the background to the actions: something that the average reader seldom knows and which is generally the crux of the whole matter.

It was all done in such a way that there could be no doubt as to where you stood. Yet, it gave the weak fish a way to save face.

I do hope they got your point.

I'm always relieved to find that there really are some good people who will speak out. Yeah, Mariner!

My other thought, that perhaps you could package in some way, is to have some "Bed and Breakfast" rooms, especially in Cohasset, but in all local towns as well.

Rep Studds responds to Congressional charge

(Congressman Gerry E. Studds issued the following statement this week in his Weekly Report to the People.)

This past Thursday, the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct recommended to the House of Representatives that I be reprimanded by the House for certain events which occurred in 1973.

For reasons spelled out in a statement I made on the floor of the House, I have decided not to contest the procedure recommended by the Committee. The full text of that statement follows:

All Members of Congress must cope with the challenge of initiating and maintaining a career in public office without destroying entirely the ability to lead a meaningful and emotionally fulfilling private life. It is not a simple task for any of us to meet adequately the obligations of either public or private life, let alone both. But these challenges are made substantially more complex when one is, as am I, both an elected public official and gay.

The staff of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct has spent more than a year, and hundreds of thousands of dollars on an investigation, the results of which were announced earlier today. The allegations which have been directed against me center on a brief relationship which began and ended ten years ago. I do not seek to contest the existence of that relationship, which without question reflected a very serious error in judgment on my part.

I do not believe, however, that a relationship which was mutual and voluntary; without coercion; without any preferential treatment, express or implied; without harassment of any kind; which was private; and which occurred ten years ago constitutes "improper sexual conduct" within the meaning of House Resolution 518, and as defined by the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct itself, in its report of last December.

The procedures used in this instance by the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct presented me with the most difficult choice I have had to make in my life. I have the right, under the Rules of the House, to insist on a full and public series of hearings concerning the allegations against me. The only other option presented to me by the Committee was to accept without contest a reprimand by the full House. If I had chosen the first option, to insist on a series of full public hearings, I would, I believe, have been able to demonstrate beyond a doubt that:

a) the staff of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct exceeded the investigatory charge it was granted by the House pursuant to House Resolution 518;

b) the private, consensual relationship discussed in the Committee's allegations did not meet the Committee's own definition of "improper sexual conduct"; and

c) the investigative conduct of the Committee staff, in general, raises fundamental questions with respect to the right to privacy and procedural fairness.

These were, for me, extraordinarily strong reasons to insist on public hearings with respect to the allegations. My own personal instincts have virtually compelled me to contest the Committee's recommendation.

But, I have foremost in my mind the need to protect, to the extent it is still possible given the Committee's action, the privacy of other individuals affected by these allegations. Those individuals have a right to personal privacy that would be inevitably and irremediably shattered if I were to insist on public hearings. It is apparent to me, after prolonged personal reflection, that the preservation of that right to privacy is more important than proving in public the validity of the points I have made.

Another consideration contributing to my decision is that I have an obligation to my constituents to perform to the best of my ability as a Member of Congress on issues of enormous importance and complexity. The demands on my time and energy, which a public fight on the issues raised by the Committee's actions and procedures would require, would make it more difficult for me to do the job which I have been elected to do.

Accordingly, I will not contest procedurally the course of action recommended by the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct.

In doing so, however, I repeat that in my judgment, the mutually voluntary, private relationship between adults, which occurred ten years ago, should not — by any conceivable standard of fairness, rationality, rule or law — warrant the attention or action of the House of Representatives of the United States.

Thanks from Minelli...

To the Editor:

I want to thank each and every person who supported me on my recent reappointment to the position of Boys' Varsity Basketball coach.

Words cannot adquately express my feeling of appreciation.

Again, people of Cohasset, thank you.

Edward Minelli

The Studds Case

implicit in what the law calls "statutory rape."

Thus, morally if not legally, what Studds committed is statutory rape, the coercive factors being age and high office. We're sorry to say it, but it is on the assumption of moral statutory rape that the judgment of Studds' constituents should proceed.

That is a serious offense, one that neither Studds' otherwise outstanding public service, nor time alone, can diminish. Should he resign immediately, as newspapers in both Boston and Quincy have demanded?

In our own error-prone frailty we think not. This was truly an error of the flesh. Although coercion was implicit from the boy's point of view, from Studds' point of view it was a matter of succumbing to temptation. There was no coercive intent, no overt use of power, no demands made, no favors granted.

Secondly, as we are given to understand, this was an aberration, not a pattern of behavior. The incidents occurred during the first stressful year of Studds' career in Washington, and were not repeated.

Thirdly, typical of the forthright character of the man, Studds has "come clean." The Ethics Committee's announcement was but minutes old when Studds appeared on the floor of Congress with a dramatic statement. That evening he was answering his phone at his home — extraordinary under the circumstances.

Compare Studds' behavior during what must be a great life-crisis with that of Mr. Nixon a decade ago or that of John Profumo two decades ago. In comparison Studds emerges in our estimation as a courageous and highly ethical man who at one time in his life made a very serious moral blunder.

If one believes at all in the redemption of sin, one must believe that a man who has made one mistake and come clean before all mankind can regain the public trust. That is our view. We believe that Studds could serve in the Congress for many years to come.

But more importantly, we believe that the political judgment that needs to be rendered ought not be made either by us or by that segment of the editorial press now demanding a resignation.

Political judgment in this case belongs where it has always been: with the people in the sanctity of the voting booth. It is a decade since the episode in question occurred, but it is only a little over a year until the 1984 election. That is the appropriate time for Studds to face his political "makers," his constituents.

Judgment can keep till then.

There are times when it would be great to be able to provide more space, more peace and quiet, more privacy, and more comfort for family and good friends than that found in our average small and/or child filled homes.

Yes, I know, we have the motel, but something a bit more intimate, more gracious and charming, and less expensive is what I have in mind.

I'll bet there are some people with a flair for hostessing who have the guest room we all dream about. I remember the days that the Music Circus had a list of rooms for rent for cast members. It was fun to meet new people from other parts of the country or world.

Bed and Breakfasts could be done individually or some enterprising soul could act as a liaison between host/hostesses and guests. They are springing up everywhere—why not in our lovely town?

Defending the 'I-A'

To the Editor:

Recently the Board of Health indicated that Cohasset's first "I/A" system failed. No "I/A" system failed for none was built. Lombardo Associates has an approved concept for the two homes on Jerusalem Road, but this system was never constructed nor even designed. What failed, not surprisingly, was the existing, inadequate cesspool when doused with a large quantity of water. During this test of the performance of the cesspool water broke out of an adjacent retaining wall.

This indicated that for the water disposal of this system that the existing cesspool is inadequate and must be rebuilt and enlarged.

Do understand that the effluent entering this cesspool from the Lombardo proposal would be treated and disinfected and would exceed tertiary standards. Water which in most localities is acceptable for direct discharge into streams, rivers or ponds. Certainly, an overflow of clear tertiary quality water is preferable to a raw sewage spill which would result in the case of the existing system when subject to the test load.

This is not Cohasset's first "I/A" system. We have over 2,100 "I/A" systems in the town now (four existing on lot systems) the majority of which work. We are building approved "I/A" systems every time a new home is constructed in Cohasset.

This proposed alternative system is located in the phase three area of the M & E sewerage plan. Under this plan this lot's problems would be solved in the year 2010! Meanwhile the property either pollutes its neighborhood or is condemned by the Board of Health until saved by the arrival of the big sewer pipe in 2010. The Board of Sewer Commissioners wishes to see problems like this solved today, not 26 years from now and at a cost to the town that it cannot afford.

I/A is now at work in over 800 communities in the U.S. The Board of Sewer Commissioners will see to it that Cohasset is added to this list.

WCVB expresses 'thanks!'

To the Editor:

On June 18, Channel 5 held a picnic on Cohasset Common.

Throughout the day we taped the activities for our Fourth of July Special, "Five's Family Fourth."

We owe a large part of the success of our program to the generosity of the town of Cohasset for allowing us to use their beautiful grounds and town facilities.

Everyone in Cohasset that we worked with was so cooperative that this major event came off virtually problem free, no small accomplishment for such a logistically complicated production.

We extend our sincere thanks to everyone in Cohasset for their assistance and good will, and for letting us be a part of their community for that day.

Praise for Murray

To the Editor:

I wish publicly to thank Representative Mary Jeanette Murray for her outstanding effort to save one of the smallest agencies in the Commonwealth, the Massachusetts Civil Defense Agency.

This Agency's primary mission is to mitigate the effects of all disasters both natural and man-caused. In other words they are in the business of saving the lives and protecting the property of the citizens of this Commonwealth.

Representative Murray, without regard to political ramifications, introduced an amendment to restore the funds necessary to maintain the Massachusetts Civil Defense Agency at its present manning level. Her overriding consideration in making this decision was, "What is best for the citizens of this Commonwealth."

Even though her amendment was defeated in the House by a very small margin, her efforts and enthusiasm carried over into the Senate, and they restored these funds to the civil defense budget and saved the agency from being severely crippled and unable to perform its legally mandated mission.

Representative Murray should be publicly acclaimed as a true representative of the people. Her concern for the welfare of her constituents reflects a deep understanding and adherence to the concept of our founding fathers . . . "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people." The citizens of this Commonwealth are extremely fortunate to have an individual of the caliber of Representative Mary Jeanette Murray serving them.

Sincerely yours,
Francis J. Willard,
Area II Director
State Civil Defense Agency
Office of Emergency Preparedness

Selectmen briefs . . .

Beach Sticker Fees

Selectmen voted last week to keep the existing rules regarding beach sticker fees intact. The decision to keep the fee schedule means that unrelated persons sharing the same house are not entitled to a second-sticker discount, as are members of the same family.

Connie Clifford and housemate Susan Rich of North Main Street have argued for several weeks that they are entitled to the second-car discount because they share a home.

According to facility sticker regulations, the first sticker may be bought for $10, but a discount price of $2 is given for the second vehicle belonging to the same family. Although the women are not related, they have insisted since they share a home, they are entitled to the same discount.

Selectman Frank England said he would oppose a change in the regulations in mid-summer. He proposed that a flat rate be charged next year for all vehicles, regardless of whether they belong to family members.

Selectmen Clifford Mitman and Mary Jane McArthur felt the rule should be changed. Mitman has been supportive of the argument offered by the two North Main Street residents, and admitted the rules were wrong and should be changed.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza told selectmen that although there is no written policy regarding discounts for family members, it has been a long standing policy of the town.

Police Association Pay

Selectmen voted last week to proportionately divide $500 in the police contract which was to be used toward the salary for a detective during the past fiscal year. But because a detective was not hired in Fiscal Year 1983, the association requested the money be divided among the membership.

Selectman John DeBassio agreed the $500 was part of the percentage negotiated into the police contract, and should be given back to the association.

Association President Peter Laugelle argued that the $500 was part of the negotiated contract package and was never used. He said the money should be paid back to the association, and not set aside in the town's reserve fund.

Selectman Clifford Mitman wondered whether this action would be setting a bad precedent, that selectmen rather than the personnel committee negotiate contract regulations. He said the police association should have contacted selectmen and the personnel committee in January to work out an arrangement for the surplus money. Although he understood this would be a "stop gap measure," Mitman said selectmen should be careful not to repeat this procedure.

Fire Department Appointment

Responding to a recommendation from Fire Chief Martin Dooley, selectmen last week appointed Robert F. Protulis a permanent firefighter-EMT, beginning Aug. 1.

Protulis had been a member of the department's call force and was recommended for the permanent position after he scored highest among applicants on the Civil Service exam.

Chief Dooley was asked by Patricia Walsh, who was attending the selectmen's meeting last week, whether all firefighters were currently certified EMT's, which is a departmental regulation. Dooley replied that five Cohasset firefighters have "dropped" their EMT certification.

Conversation with Mary Jane McArthur

wood beams, wainscoting, and low ceilings.

Mary Jane is a special needs teacher at a Scituate elementary school. She has been employed in Scituate for the past 15 years. But it was her teaching position in Cohasset three years prior, that originally brought her family to this community.

Along with her professional duties, Mary Jane has fulfilled her personal ambitions to remain active in the civic affairs of the town. While raising her two daughters, Kati,26, and Susan,27, she was appointed to the School Facilities Committee in 1960, the Conservation Commission, and the Government Island Study Committee, the Bicentennial Committee in 1970, and the Advisory Committee for four years. She is now serving the last year of her three-year term as selectman.

"I've always been interested in town government, more than anything outside the community. I've always been interested in helping, doing what I can," she says while pondering reasons why she began her intense involvement in town politics. "I felt that because of my interest and willingness to work, I had something to offer."

This year will be her 24th year in the teaching profession, and although she has contemplated retirement, Mary Jane has no immediate plans to relinquish her career.

"I really enjoy teaching," she says. "I like children, and being in special education is really a challenge. Anything you accomplish is really an acheivement."

This sentiment spills over to her participation in town government. "I have never been one to sit back and watch the clouds go by. I would find life very boring," she concedes.

She has not yet decided whether to run for re-election to the board of selectmen. She will make her decision, Mary Jane explains, by January.

In the meantime, there are bountiful issues and concerns confronting the new five-member board of selectmen. In fact, it was just last year when the debate centered on whether the town should expand its leadership from a three, to a five-member selectmen board.

Although originally opposed to the concept, Mary Jane has swung full circle and happily concedes she is extremely pleased with the increased administration. The diversification of the five members on the present board has allowed for more comprehensive exmain-ation of the questions placed before the town officials.

Each of the selectmen, she explains, may offer a wide variety of perspectives to one issue. And the present board members, of which Mary Jane presides as chairman, are compatible, yet share different backgrounds and viewpoints.

"After seeing how well the five-member board is working, I think it is definitely an advantage to the town," she says.

The change in town administration has reverberated into other areas, and Mary Jane welcomes the change.

"New laws and programs have made the operation of the town more complex," she says. "But these changes have made town government more responsive to the people, through laws as as the Open Meeting law, and the Conflict of Interest law. People are demanding accountability from town government, and they should."

She describes this board of selectmen, as "hard working," and explains they are in the midst of some long range planning. Increased communication is the key to effective town leadership, and this board has undertaken the task of developing such a policy.

Mary Jane says selectmen, in an effort to keep the community well informed, is determined to cooperate with the media. The disemination of accurate information is a goal of this administration, she adds.

The board members have decided to develop some sort of community newsletter which will be published about three times a year. The first edition will probably be prepared in the fall, she says, although details have not been finalized.

The board is currently in the process of defining written policies and procedures which Mary Jane says are "sorely needed," and have been overlooked too long. The selectmen are also attempting to be more available to the public through the newly-established drop-in meetings at town hall.

Although the only visitors to the selectmen's informal meeting last month were two local Girl Scouts, Mary Jane feels the concept is a good one, and should not be eliminated too soon. In fact, selectmen are planning another drop in meeting soon.

"These meetings are great for people who just want to come and talk with selectmen about anything regarding town government. Some people shy away from attending a formal meeting, with an agenda, and this would be a great opportunity for them to get together with us and talk about their concerns," she says.

The major issues confronting Cohasset, according to this fulltime participant, are the sewers, which is "something this community has to address," she notes.

The fair housing issue, which is being worked on now, is another problem which Cohasset must resolve in the immediate future, according to the selectman.

"My view is that the town has a responsibility to confront this issue and develop a plan with the selectmen, housing authority and planning board, that is acceptable to us and the state," Mary Jane states, adding that the town will become increasingly involved in this plan

The overcrowded conditions at town hall will spur the formation of a committee to address the town's office needs. Along with that issue, is the search for a municipal garage. Mary Jane supports the idea of housing all public works departments under one roof.

And an issue which has failed to die this year, is the policies and procedures regarding the issuance of beach stickers. The current controversy revolves around whether the town should allow second-car discounts to unrelated persons living in the same house.

Throughout selectmen's review of the beach sticker regulations, they attempted to "cover all bases," she says, but evidently failed.

"Now I think the only fair and equitable thing would be to charge everyone the same fee. But this will be a change we will have to consider at the end of the season. We also have to take a good look at the hours

Roys seek conservation approval for parking lot

By Patricia Anne Walsh

John, Mary and Stephen Roy, owners of Cohasset-By-The-Sea Inn have applied to the Conservation Commission for permission to build a parking lot at 10 Pleasant St.

This area is in a flood plain area.

Building Inspector Robert Dennis said Monday the bylaws do not prohibit a parking lot in a commercially zoned area. The lot on Pleasant St. includes a small area that is zoned residential, but the Roy's plan for 37 parking spaces does not include the residential portion.

Dennis has issued a cease and desist order.

He wrote to Assistant Town Counsel Jack Slater requesting a "legal opinion on whether a special permit is required and any procedure or methods you would recommend on enforcing the cease and desist order which the Roys are in violation of."

Dennis said, "I have been informed by both Mrs. Roy and Mr. Charles Humphreys (attorney) that this parking lot is not connected with the motel at this time, and therefore the (zoning) bylaw does not apply at this time. They intend to go before the Board of Appeals and have parking for the motel under a variance."

This section of the bylaw says, "The walking distance between the farthest point of the parking areas and the main pedestrian entrance to the building or use in question shall not exceed 500 feet, except that in the case of employees only, the distance may be increased to 1,000 feet."

The Pleasant Street lot is approximately one-half mile by road from Cohasset-By-The-Sea Inn on Elm St.

At the Conservation Commission heraing Mary Roy said the company plans to valet-park cars of overnight guests on the lot.

During the hearing the Roys said they have plenty of parking, and this year have allowed the 20 to 30 employees of Hugo's Restaurant to park in their Elm St. lot.

Later in the hearing they acknowledged they may want more parking spaces, in response to a question from Robert Sturdy.

Dennis said, "When I learned that there was fill at this site, I personally delivered a cease and desist order to the Roys so that no further work would be done without the proper permits. I verbally (later on — after the application was filed) informed Mrs. Roy that they would need a Special Permit. She refused to accept this and proceeded to spread the fill on the lot in violation of the cease and desist order."

Contractor Wayne Sawchuck, who formerly owned the lot, and a former Planning Board member, said he felt spreading gravel on the site should be acceptable, because it is allowed on driveways, and he "considered a parking lot to be a driveway."

Under the zoning bylaws, however, a driveway is defined as "not more than 24 feet in width."

John O'Toole asked if the Roys planned to landscape the five foot setback in the front. The Roys said they would if the abuttors, John and Linda Gaston requested it.

The Roys said they would also build a fence or leave a green fence in accordance with the Gaston's wishes.

Dennis said in his letter, "They have indicated they will apply for a fence permit and lighting even though it is not required for a commercial parking lot."

However, at the hearing the commission was told that the cars left overnight would be locked and no lighting was planned.

Commission member, Austin O'Toole, said he personally felt the parking lot would be a good use for the land. No citizens appeared in opposition to the application.

Volunteers sought for town boards

Selectmen Chairman Mary Jane McArthur said the Selectmen are still actively seeking volunteers to serve on town boards and committees. "We especially need engineers," she said.

Executive Secretary, Mark Lanza said he sent over 60 letters to engineers who are residents of the town, but received only three replies to the request they volunteer to serve.

Lanza reports the following committees have vacancies:

Municipal Facilities-Garage Committee is a five-man board. There have been no volunteers. An engineer is wanted.

Town Hall Study Committee is a five-man board. Only Daniel Cotton has re-applied. An engineer and architect are wanted.

Drainage Study Committee has one known vacancy, and another expected. A hydrologist or civil engineer is wanted.

Council for Aging has one vacancy since Alice Daunt resigned.

Zoning Board of Appeals may have a future vacancy. An engineer is desired.

Building Code Appeals Board has one vacancy. An engineer or construction worker is desired. The construction worker should not do much busines within Cohasset to avoid possible conflicts of interest, Lanza said.

Any interested citizens should call Selectman Lanza at 383-0228.

Only commercial shellfish licenses to be issued

Selectmen decided last week that only three commercial shellfish licenses will be issued this year, on a first come, first serve basis.

The limitation was established after some residents warned selectmen that continued harvesting of the mussels in Little Harbor may soon deplete the supply. Others advised the town officials that only three of the current license holders actually dig for mussels.

Striding up to selectmen at last week's meeting, was Patricia Walsh, who owns one of the five shellfish licenses issued last spring. Holding a small, dirtied plastic bucket, Walsh demonstrated how she has only harvested three buckets since she was issued the license. The license regulations state a commercial mussel fisherman may harvest up to 30 bushels per day, considerably more than the bucket Walsh carried at her side.

Jack Hubbard, speaking as a private citizen and not a Conservation Commission representative agreed that three licenses would serve the community's needs.

Jerry Pattison, a fulltime mussel fisherman, said he and his brother, who also owns a shellfish license, never saw anyone else harvesting the mussel beds along Little Harbor. Especially during the winter, the Pattison brothers agreed they rarely harvest the 30-bushel limit. But he agreed that lowering the limit to half that amount would not be profitable for commercial fishermen such as he and his brother.

At selectmen's meeting two weeks ago, residents of the harbor area warned selectmen to limit and closely monitor the commercial mussel harvesting. They advised that continued taking of the mussels would deplete the supply.

Selectmen voted to limit the number of commercial shellfish licenses to three, while keeping the daily load to 30 bushels. They also doubled the license fee to $40, with the stipulation that mussel fishermen submit monthly catch reports.

Commuter rail service could become a reality

By Judith Denzer Cooper

Rail service from Hingham to Braintree could become a reality within two or three years. There are several "ifs" attached to the proposal but William McDonald of the MBTA commuter rail service says it is definitely a possibility.

The major problem is what to do with people when they get to Braintree. The present red line would have to increase the number of cars and run more frequently if it is to handle hundreds of additional passengers.

The right-of-way for rail service is unencumbered from Hingham to Braintree. Tracks would have to be replaced and brush cleared but McDonald said the cost of the project would be under three million dollars. The time needed to put the line in order is estimated at two or three years.

McDonald, several other MBTA and State Office of Transportation officials spoke to approximately 50 intrested citizens at a meeting of Citizens for the Improvement of Commuter Rail (CIRC) in Hingham on June 16.

An alternative plan would bring rail passengers directly into South Boston rather than connect to the red line in Braintree. This would involve a new bridge over the Neponset River and a major modification of the South Hampton Street railroad yards. The cost of the project would be approximately 30 million dollars.

Caroline Stouffer of Hingham asked the State officials to think carefully before presenting plans that may not materialize. "It is not fair to raise hopes or fears. I'm referring to those who hope for rail service or those who fear the effect of railroad lines on their property values," said Stouffer.

McDonald said that any actual plans to build a rail facility would include public hearings and an environmental impact study. Part of the presentation emphasized that new rail vehicles are nothing like the coal or diesel engines of the past.

Another problem that commuter rail service would have to address is automobile parking. Large pieces of land must be acquired to provide a place for commuter cars. The ultimate answer to this problem is feeder buses that would bring people from stops near their homes to the rail station.

EXPRESSWAY RECONSTRUCTION

None of the plans or proposals presented at the meeting addressed the issue of alternative transportation during the 1984 reconstruction of the Southeast Expressway.

McDonald said that the MBTA, the State Department of Public Works and the Office of Transportation will be spending the next two months developing alternative plans for this period. Buses, light rail vehicles, commuter boats, car pools, etc. will all play a role in trying to solve the problem.

People in the audience who had survived the Mass. Avenue reconstruction on the Expressway said this issue must have priority attention. They recalled two and three hour delays coming home from Boston and want guarantees that this will be avoided in 1984.

State Representative Frank Hynes of Marshfield sent a statement voicing his concern about South Shore transportation problems. He said he will support legislation for rail service, a monorail or construction of an alternate highway to solve the problem. Hynes also said the 1984 crisis could be reduced by having crews work at night and banning trucks on the road from 6:30 to 9 a.m. and from 3:30 to 6 p.m.

There is a $200,000 transportation bond issue before the legislature and the MBTA urges support for this and similar legislation so that South Shore transportation can be improved. New rails and cars for existing lines are part of the package.

Hugh Jones of Westwood, chairman of CIRC, said that people will not get rail service unless they actively pursue their objective. His organization has 2,000 members and serves as a liaison between the State and rail passengers. Christine and Frank Allen of Hingham sponsored the CIRC meeting which was held at Hingham's town hall.

A fable about casino gambling

By Patricia Desmond

This story started out to be an update of the ongoing battle against legalized casinos.

It turned out to be a fable.

It was easier to write that way.

This is the fable of Citizens Against Casino Gambling, CACG, as they are are more commonly known.

The story begins back in 1977 when the town of Hull, being stalked by the tax biting monster, decided to look into legalized gambling as its salvation.

Of course, many of the Hulloian voters saw little difference from the legalized gambling a casino would establish and the quarter arcades that attract modern day low rollers to the beach.

Hull's Carol Oteri thought the concept was a bad one then.

"The more I researched it, the more I knew I was right. The more my concern was emphasized," she said.

So time went on and politicians from Hull worked to push legislation through the State House to make their little sand spit the mecca of gamblers East of Nevada.

Well, Atlantic City beat them to the punch for starters. And then the people of Hingham and Cohasset came to grasp with the fact that this casino that may have seemed like one more paragon folly was being sketched out within blocks of their boundaries. Hundreds of anti-casino thinkers signed petitions and influenced the top level of state government. The voice of Hingham and Cohasset was heard clearly. They no more wanted thousands of gamblers heading to their little neighbor than they wanted to see the regional waste dump for radioactive materials put in the MDC Bathhouse at Nantasket.

And so the story goes on, Carol Oteri and the rest of the CACG people studied the New Jersey fight. They wanted to make sure they didn't trip on the same mistakes.

At one of the earliest meetings of the group, the people of CACG decided New Jersey failed because the issue was debated on moral grounds.

"There were plenty of other reasons to oppose the idea of a casino in Hull," Beth Harling said in comment on the overall strategy.

For several years the fight was fought fast and furious.

Emotions ran heavy on either side. It must be said that while the pro-casino group was clearly smaller anywhere out of Hull, their voices hit angry and loud chords at meetings and cocktails parties. The subject of casino gambling became a watchword for social discomfort.

Meanwhile the people of CACG led by Carol Oteri kept organizing, speaking to interested people, writing letters and news reports, lobbying politicians, seeking private funds, adding the names of notables to the list of officers.

The pro-gamblers kept at it too.

Every year the pro-gamblers filed legislation to legalize their dream. Every year the CACG and Carol Oteri testified to the problems that would create.

There was a meeting back in the days of the last gubernatorial election. Michael Dukakis, Carol Oteri and Beth Harling sat down and talked about the future.

The hopeful candidate promised his support to keep casinos out of Massachusetts.

More time goes by.

Meanwhile the state lottery has invaded Cohasset, Hingham, Hanover, Norwell, Marshfield, Scituate and the rest of the state with a computerized betting system. And small children sign "Have you played your number" on the back of school buses.

The moral of the fable is:

When you're dueling with an octopus, keep your eye on all the options.

The Methodist Church gives Carol Oteri the social justice award for her work in the fight against the forces of gambling.

She feels like a jackpot winner.

"I am thrilled and humbly honored," she said when asked about the award.

CACG keeps up its battle to keep casinos in Atlantic City and out of the South Shore.

CACG remains alert in the face of the seemingly eternal fight.

Campership Coalition of S.S. sends kids to summercamp

Ninety abused, emotionally disturbed, handicapped, and low-income children will attend camp this year, thanks to the efforts of a few dedicated individuals and the generosity of eight South Shore businesses and community groups, including the Cohasset Rotary Club.

The Campership Coalition of the South Shore collected $3,375 in contributions and were successful in securing matched funds from the Department of Social Services Public-Private Partnership Program.

Contributions to the Coalition's Campership fund include Anodyne Homemaker Services, Inc., Cohasset Rotary, EG & G Environmental Group, Polaroid Foundation, The Pilgrim Fellowship of Hingham Congretional Church, J. Everett Robbie Foundation, South Shore Bank and Stone and Webster.

The Campership Coalition of the South Shore is a group of citizens who were concerned about the lack of financial assistance for children who needed day programs in the summer months. The Coastline and South Shore Councils for Children led the Coalition's campaign to raise funds, and set-up a Campership Program for these children.

The Councils for Children are the citizen-arm of the State Office for Children and are responsible for monitoring children's services, assessing area needs and advocating for needed services. The Coastline Council serves Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate, and Weymouth.

For more information, write their office at 49 Hayward Street, E. Braintree, 02184 or call 849-1882.

Non-appointment medical centers save S.S.

(Editor's Note: This is the first of a two-part series on walk-in medical centers on the South Shore. The series will feature the Rte. 3A Medical Center in Cohasset, the South Shore Health Care Center in Marshfield, the Hanover Medical Center, and the South Shore Medical Center in Norwell, which is a walk-in and appointment facility. We will also spotlight the physicians who staff the centers.)

By Jane Lane

At one time, this area was slowly dying, starved from a lack of emergency medical facilities.

The nearest hospital to many communities was several miles away. Everyone in Scituate is all too familiar with the long, tedious travel to the South Shore Hospital. Marshfield residents had a choice between that hospital, and Jordan, each about 20 miles from home.

And anyone who has ever passed through the glass doors of a hospital's emergency room doors, knows the long hours spent in the facility before discharge.

This is not a problem indigenous of this community alone. So, a few years ago, small walk-in medical centers began to crop up in cities and towns throughout the country.

And, as Dr. William Raskin, founder of the Route 3A Medical Center says, "this is the future trend of modern medicine."

There are four medical centers that service this area on a primarily non-appointment basis. Although each center will handle serious medical emergencies "in a dire emergency," that is not their function. What they intend to offer the surrounding communities, is quality health care at reasonable costs on a walk-in basis.

And while some of these medical centers overlap in the communities they serve, each facility is unique in the type of service they offer.

The first medical center of this type to be built in this area was the South Shore Medical Center on Rte. 58 in Norwell. That center, founded by a small group of local physicians, is now in the midst of a multi-million dollar expansion project. The center serves the communities of Norwell, Hanover, Hingham, Scituate, Cohasset, Rockland, and several towns including Kingston, Plymouth, and Hanson.

Further down Rte. 58 is the Hanover Medical Center located in the shopping center across from the Hanover Mall. Owned by the Emergency Medical Associates, Inc., which is based in Boston, this strictly walk-in facility has been open for five years. Patients who have received treatment at that center reside in Hanover, Marshfield, Pembroke, Norwell, Duxbury, Rockland, Hanson, and throughout the South Shore.

The Rte. 3A Medical Center in Cohasset, was opened by Dr. Raskin in October, 1981. Patients from Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell, Hull, Hingham, Marshfield and beyond, have visited the center which is located in the Cushing Plaza shopping center.

The fourth, and newest facility, is the South Shore Health Care Center on Rte. 139 in Marshfield. The two-week old facility is owned by South Shore Properties, the parent company of the South Shore Hospital. The territory serviced by this center will include Marshfield, Pembroke and Duxbury, and also Norwell, Hingham, Cohasset, Kingston, and Halifax.

Now that the medical services are within the proximity of the patients, the competition is on among these facilities to lure perspective clients.

Dr. Raskin investigated social and economic information as a background in forming his medical center. As society changed, he became convinced that the future of medicine would have to follow that path.

"Most young people today are fairly healthy and do not need to visit a doctor on a regular basis, just when they are sick. Most doctors spend half a day in the hospital, and are therefore forced to make appointments. This works for some senior citizens, but it is not convenient for the vast majority of the population," he says.

With an increase in the consumer awareness of most people, the onslaught of the "TV physician," and the fact that the average American moves every five years, the concept of the beloved family doctor has all but vanished, he adds.

"People want to be seen by a doctor without the wait and without the hassle, and they're not willing to sit and wait for three hours," Raskins notes. " This accounts for the rise in the number of these facilities. And a new type of doctor is emerging, one who is trained in emergency medicine and is trained to diagnose and treat a variety of ailments."

Raskin, who is board certified in emergency medicine, believes his medical center differs from the other facilities because "it is more like a private practice, yet it is open 13 hours a day, seven days a week."

He is the owner and alternates work shifts with Dr. Lawrence Kerns of Scituate. Raskin is proud to state his center is not financed by any corporation or hospital. He is eager to maintain the concept of efficient medical care to his patients on a personal level.

"I have had several thousand patients come back to me for the treatment of various diseases, including gout, mild hypertension and mild diabetes. I work here 48 hours minimum. I can't cure every problem with one shot. So if a patient needs a follow-up visit, they will come back and will be able to see the same doctor most of the time. In that way, my center is similar to a private practice.," he says.

The Rte. 3A Medical Center has averaged about 1500 annual patient visits. Thirty people are employed there, including the doctors, nurses and lab staff. The brightly-colored center includes a small waiting room, two enclosed examining rooms and a general treatment area. The facility is equipped with an X-ray room and laboratory materials.

Dr. Frederick Murphy, a Marshfield resident, and emergency room physician at South Shore Hospital, is medical director of the South Shore Health Care Center in Marshfield.

He agrees the overcrowded conditions of the hospital's emergency room, and the lack of immediate medical care in this area precipatated the production of these centers.

"There is a need for this type of center," he says. "It brings the expertise and skills of the hospital closer to the community. Ambulatory care centers are the trend across the country now. This is a long overdue improvement in the delivery of medical care."

To highlight the obvious need for such a facility, Dr. Murphy related an incident which occurred last week during a private wine and cheese party held at the center to celebrate its opening. Not knowing the center was closed, a young mother and her three young children sought the help of a physician. Her baby had a laceration and needed immediate medical attention.

According to South Shore Hospital spokesman Richard Brooks, without missing a beat Dr. Murphy went to the woman's car, grabbed the baby in his arms and treated the infant inside the center. He was beaming with pride as he exited the room after successful treatment, saying, "that made my day."

Dr. Murphy used the incidence to explain the need for the Marshfield center. Without such a facility, he says, the anguished mother would have had to drive 20 miles to the nearest hospital.

Like the Rte. 3A center, which is located on a busy thoroughfare, the Marshfield center is on Rte. 139, close to the Rte. 3 exit, and Rte. 3A in Marshfield. According to Brooks, that location was vigorously sought out by the hospital administration. In fact, the entire concept of the medical center was scrupulously investigated beforehand. About 18 months ago, the hospital surveyed the area to determine the need for non-appointment medical service, offered daily, 12 hours per day.

The idea of a satellite medical center was agreed to be the most efficient manner in which the hospital could improve its medical service to the community, Dr. Murphy says. Within six months after that audit was completed, the hospital began construction of the Marshfield center.

The South Shore Hospital now treats an average of 200 persons a day. It is hoped that with the creation of satellite centers, this flood of emergency visits to the hospital will decline.

As with all the other medical centers on the South Shore, the Marshfield clinic discourages serious emergency patients from admittance into the facility. Heavy trauma patients, such as those involved in serious motor vehicle accidents or heart attacks victims, are advised to be sent via ambulance to a hospital. What these centers do specialize in is the diagnosis and treatment of minor ailments such as colds, sore throats, and back aches and minor accidents such as small lacerations and minor fractures.

The Marshfield facility is gleaming with newness. A bright and attratively-furnished waiting room and business office are situated in the front of the building leased to South Shore Properties.

The center, which has been treating 40 to 50 patients per day since its opening, has several examining rooms, two enclosed treatment rooms, a lab, X-ray room, a trauma room and an Ob-Gyn room. There is always a physician, nurse, X-ray technician and business personnel at the center from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily.

The unique element of this center is that several physicians, affiliated with South Shore Hospital in a certain speciality, are on call for patients at the center. Dr. Henry Gravel, an emergency medicine specialist at South Shore Hospital, was at the center last week when the Mariner toured the facility. Ellie Hagerty, who has worked for another South Shore medical center, is head nurse at the Marshfield clinic.

"The whole atmosphere of this center is to give the patients a positive feeling. It was designed to look bright and airy, and I think we have acheived that," Brooks says.

The center leases a considerable amount of the old Gillespie Ford building which is currently not in use. As the number of patient visits expands, the building will have the capability to proportionately increase.

DPW has few answers for 'Distressway' mess

By Judith Denzer Cooper

The Southeast Expressway from Route 128 to the Mass. Avenue exit will be rebuilt during 1984 and 1985. Reconstructing the 8.3 miles of heavily travelled road means that many commuters will have to find alternative methods of travelling in and out of Boston during the two year period.

Michael Meyer, director of planning for the State Department of Public Works, addressed those commuter problems and some possible solutions at a meeting of the South Shore Transportation Caucus on Tuesday, July 12 at Hingham Town Hall.

Many of the 100 people who listened to presentations by members of the State DPW and the MBTA said plans were not sufficient and that construction of the road will bring major disruptions to people who must go to Boston each day.

Speakers asked, "How much worse can it get?" "How long will it (reconstruction) take?" "What will this do to the Red Line?" and "Will you provide decent bus service?" Those who attended the meeting described themselves as irate commuters who are already suffering from a poor transportation system.

In response to statements that road construction work is never done on time, Meyers said, "This job is going to be done in two years. And that's a fact." He added that this is one of the largest contracts the State DPW has awarded. The project has an estimated cost of $65 million.

Limited MBTA Improvement

One resident asked if the Red Line will add trains and buses to its present service. Alan Casteline, chief service planning officer for the MBTA said, "The answer is no." There will be additional parking space when the Quincy T station opens and 70 buses are being rehabilitated, but there will not be any additional trains or buses purchased in time for the 1984 construction deadline.

State Rep. Frank Hynes (D-Marshfield and Scituate) with obvious dismay. "You're saying we cannot look to the MBTA to alleviate the problem by rail or bus."

Meyer answered that the Red Line is only one part of the proposed solution. He will also see that park and ride facilities are improved and private bus runs are increased.

The audience listened to Meyer's presentation which listed a variety of methods to relieve the potential log-jam on the Expressway. But, when specific questions were asked, such as, "Why don't you help get a second boat?" or "Can you control traffic lights along alternate routes?", the answers were disappointing or vauge.

Speakers made several suggestions for mini shuttle buses, commuter rail service, express buses and equalized fares. Single fare transfer tickets were also suggested as well as Saturday and Sunday bus service.

Many people questioned the quality of the present facilities and expressed disbelief that more people could be asked to use them. Others said present services are unreliable and people will sit in their cars on the road rather than get stuck in Braintree with no way to get home.

Reconstruction Details

The Expressway will have two lanes under construction at a time. There will also be two lanes that can change direction. This means that there will be four lanes of traffic going north in the morning and two lanes going south. Then at the evening rush hour there will be four lanes going south and only two lanes going north.

One problem will be that two of the four lanes going in either direction will be a "tunnel." Meyer said once a car is in one of these lanes there will be no way to exit before arriving in Boston. People will have to choose to take the local lane or the express lane at the very beginning of the construction area.

Improvements will be made to the roadway, bridges, ramps and median strips. Construction will also repair and improve lighting, signs, drainage and fencing. The project will run from March to November and then close down for the winter months.

Representatives from the State DPW and MBTA will hold additional meetings during the next several months. They have also developed a public information program so that commuters can know what is happening and what alternatives are available.

Art Center Classes . . .

"Portrait, the Clothed Figure," a new summer course offered for the first time by the South Shore Art Center, will be taught by a familiar face around the center, Clement Micarelli.

Beginning Aug. 2, the class will meet Tuesday and Friday, 9:30 a.m. to noon at the Center, 103 Ripley Rd. The course qualifies for both Mass College of Art Credit and as an elective in the Center's certificate program.

Micarelli will stress composition, color and value relationships. Working from a model, students may concentrate on portrait or the full figure. Oils are preferred but other medium may be used.

A freelance fashion illustrator, Micarelli also does portraits on commission and teaches at RISD. He studied at Pratt Institute and the Rhode Island School of Design; he is currently affiliated with CC Price Portrait Gallery.

Also beginning Aug. 2 is Watercolor Portrait for intermediate and advanced levels taught by Harriet Zabusky-Zand. This is the Center's first course specifically in watercolor portrait and will meet Tuesday and Thursday, 7 to 9:30 p.m.

This course provides the students with basic watercolor techniques used in doing portraits. Emphasis will be on understanding the structure of the head and upper torso as well as composition. Basic watercolor and drawing skills are a prerequisite.

The instructor holds a BA degree from Boston University and is currently a candidate for an MA from the same school. She now instructs at ICA and the Sherborn Art Center.

Other courses beginning in August are Seeing Selectively, taught by Judeth Van Hamm Wiers, Monday and Wednesday, starting Aug. 1, from 7:30 to 10 p.m; Introductory Painting for beginning, intermediate and advanced levels, Tuesday and Thursday, beginning Aug. 2, 7:30 to 10 p.m., taught by David Tandy; and Outdoor Watercolor for all levels, taught by Virginia Avery, Wednesday and Friday, beginning Aug. 3, from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

The one children's offering for the second summer session is "Exploring with Paint and Pencil," taught by Serena Brundige, for youths seven to eleven years old. She will emphasize outdoor drawing and painting using nature forms and ideas from the imagination. The class begins Aug. 2 and will meet Tuesday and Thursday, from 2 to 3:30 p.m.

For fee information, further course description and registration, call the Center, 383-9548.

Amateur gardners' programs

A special summer program for the Amateur Gardener's Club is planned for July 26. Club members will meet at the town hall parking lot at 10 a.m. to start a trip to Sandwich.

Members will tour the Green Briar Nature Center.

The Sandwich conservation area has many nature trails and walking shoes are advised for the trail hike. Members will visit the Thorton Burgess home and exhibit.

Lunch will be held at the Daniel Webster Inn before returning to Cohasset.

Historic tour

The Cohasset Historical Society is planning the second of its three Sunday walking tours of historic Cohasset, "Pilgrimage to Cohasset's Past — A Maritime Heritage."

For two centuries Cohasset was a seafaring community and its harbor was the center of the town's livelihood.

Sunday, August 7, at 3 p.m. tourists can walk with society guides to re-live the great "Age of Sail" of this old New England fishing village.

The group will meet at the Historical Society's Lothrop House, 14 Summer Street, Cohasset, at 3 p.m. and walk to "Ship Cove" at the town's harbor.

Old buildings, wharves, by-gone shipyards and the 19th century construction of Minot's Lighthouse will be seen and described.

This is the second of three summer walking tours of old Cohasset to be hosted by the Historical Society in this, its 55th anniversary year.

For more information, call 383-0773 or 383-6930.

State warns on low income housing supported and been committed to those efforts. I would hope you could take that as an indication of our willingness."

EOCD housing official Carol Ford said the agency was not blaming the town for its past efforts, or "raking the town's applications over the coals. If Hanover is still interested, our development staff is willing to help make out the application."

Rep. Flynn blasted the state for turning down applications to develop low cost housing and then blaming the town for the lack of available units.

He stressed the "frustrations" felt in Hanover after the town's applications for housing were rejected "when clearly the need was prevalant. To reject it on the quality of the application seems absurd."

Stanley Goldman, the housing authority's acting director, also took exception to the state's stand.

"As author of the town's most recent applications, this is the first I've heard against the quality of the applications. I was told there were no funds."

Goldman said the state also emphasised combining low income family and elderly housing. "I told the housing authority I would resign before I supported that idea." He added that the town now administers three scattered site units "which are a credit to the town," and said the regional South Shore Housing Corp., based in Kingston, manages five additional units which should be turned over to the local housing board.

Housing authority chairman Michael Pizziferri said he considered the EOCD's findings "shocking."

Pizziferri said, "The public is told this town is against low-cost housing and that our acting executive director does not meet professional standards, but I stand behind him 100 percent. I find it rather burdensome to get this by the back door. The selectmen sat with the housing authority and have totally supported us. Now you tell us we're not going in the right direction for approval. This is not a snob town and we have noting against low income housing."

Draisen conceded that he did not mean to challange the quality of the town's applications for housing funds. "Perhaps a better phrase would be that the applications were denied on their 'context.' "

The housing authority and EOCD officials met briefly following Monday's meeting to outline the next step in the town's next move.

Briggs said the selectmen hope to "open dialogue" between the state and his board, the housing authority, King Street businessmen and other interested parties. He said the board hopes to set up a meeting prior to September "to start the ball rolling."

CLERGY ASSOCIATION CONCERNED

Rev. Robert Mackie of St. Andrew's Church silently sat through most of the meeting, but left shortly before it ended.

The Hanover Clergy Association took its first secular stance supporting the need for low cost housing in an open letter to selectmen last month,on the heels of the EOCD notice that Hanover was considered restrictive.

The selectmen last week informed the clergy association that Monday's meeting was open to the public, but that discussions would be limited to those who had been invited to participate.

During the meeting Briggs had referred to "some people (who) climbed on the band wagon and charged that people are denied the chance to live here." He said he was not aware of any situation when people in Hanover were denied help if it was needed, or when the housing authority had not sought every funding possibility. He compared the complaints that Hanover was restrictive to "a little boy accused of stealing candy because he had chocolate on his fingers."

Briggs later said he intended to invite Rev. Mackie to speak, but that the Episcopal minister left too soon.

He said he considered it "unfortunate" that the clergy association had not spoken with the selectmen before making its public stance. He said publicity over the clergy's statement could reflect poorly on the town, and could find its way into the state's files on Hanover.

"It's unfortunate that the clergy did not open a dialogue with the selectmen before making a public statement," Briggs said.

Homeleaving, part two

By Lois Martin

Andy finally called the other night. Not that it's a big deal for a son to call home. It was history-making, though, because it wasn't collect.

And it was his first call, let alone long distance, on his own phone. He is all settled, he said, in his apartment and just got his phone. I guess he remembered my announcement about not accepting collect calls from a son who makes more than I do, except in emergency.

Several weeks ago two men arrived in a North American Van Lines truck to remove his belongings. A humble assortment, I thought, though the most modest goods were mine being transisted to his private pad.

And I've avoided going in his room because it was echoing in there. There are reverberations of him all around the smallish room from the ship scenes wallpaper I applied after his approval in 1975 to the archery set in the closet.

PATCHES

I've been through this before, you know, the great home leaving. And I'm tougher about it than I was three years ago when the truck came to remove Brian. He, in leaving, threw down that philosophical question like a rose red gauntlet: "Is there life after children?"

My generation naturally went from the confident youth to the fretful mother within a year. We were more mother for those 20 or so years than anything else, including woman.

Consequently, when we are stripped of a life we've known best by virtue of children's ascension to adulthood, we are somewhat lost.

It is a liberation granted parents for which none prepared.

So I'd been skipping Andy's room because of those echos. And because, to be honest, it would make me a sad mother/woman to find him officially grown and gone from my life.

Oh, mine was among the clear voices of weary mothers who fervently believed none of them would stop trying to kill themselves or each other in play on a daily basis. There was that time a gentle woman knocked on the front door and said, "Excuse me, there's a tiny boy on your roof." That was after Andy had climbed out of his crib, through an open window onto the porch roof.

He also escaped personal injury, from me that time, after he filled a neighbor's 250 gallon oil tank with the outside hose that had the nozzle like the oil man used all winter.

None of those episodes was reflected in his closet. He had left his trophies from youth football and baseball. There was the BB gun which his brother used to shoot the TV, and the weights, a woebegone teddy bear way back beneath the discards...and a few leftover high school graduation pictures. I nabbed them.

I have been given two primary rewards as a mother which have surprised and gratified me. For one thing they did stop fighting. That was about four years ago when they became advocates who laughed riotously from behind closed doors instead of beating down the doors for a shot at mayhem.

And secondly, I've been given the perspective of a person who stands back and views other people, once related to her exclusively and now relating to the world. I imagine most parents have done the same. I hope so.

Because these children are fine adults. They have character, humor, applied intelligence, love of life and still some of parents.

I must put something in the room. I don't see it as a sauna/hot tub recreation area or a dratted sewing room for that matter.

I'll always see it as Andy's as the room next to his is forever Brian's.

Whatever I make of it, I shall keep the echos in the boyish decor. And remember, I'm smart enough not to arrange it so that he'll choose it as bachelor's quarters.

I've got his new number. To tell you the truth I've always had his number. And I'm keeping it. Today's his 22nd birthday. That boy came out good.

He doesn't fight with his brothers over cereal boxes anymore. He didn't take my light bulbs with him. And, to my knowledge, there have been no reports of his using his chemical engineering training to fill oil tanks with water.

When you have the hot weather blahs, just reaching in the freezer for the ice cube tray gives you a thrill, whereas even a cookout that entrails standing over a smoldering grille holds few charms. When we all long to be "cool as a cucumber," it's wise to have some of these crisp, cool-tasting "fruits" (they're really not vegetables), on hand, for it's surprising the number of ways you can serve them. I'm perfectly happy to eat them sliced, steeped in vinegar and sprinkled with ground pepper. With its smooth, dark green skin, the cucumber even looks cool and what is more refreshing than a cuke sandwich made of dark bread, sliced cukes and mayo?

A chilled cucumber soup is good and so are

SAUTEED CUCUMBERS

Cut 2 pounds seedless cucumbers crosswise into 1½" lengths. Quarter each section lengthwise and trim each quarter into an oval, removing the centers and reserving the trimmings for another use. In a colander toss the cucumber with 1 T each of white-wine vinegar and salt, let drain for 30 min. and pat dry. Saute cucumbers in skillet in 2 T unsalted butter over moderately high heat, stirring, for 4 to 5 min., or until just tender. Sprinkle the cucumber with the juice of 1/2 lemon and transfer it to a heated serving bowl. Serves 4.

At every turn of the road a shady garden nook or dusty lane is brightened nowadays by golden or orange day lilies. Like the cucumber, we have the Chinese to thank for these delights. About 650 A.D., "gum-jum," dried day lilies were used as an herb, "to reduce worry and benefit the mind." They contain vitamins and minerals and are high in protein and after washing the blossoms gently, you drain them and remove the stamens and pistils. Chop the blossoms and add to scrambled eggs, omelets, or other egg dishes, or place the buds in the juice of dill pickles and refrigerate overnight to serve with cold meat. Sliced day-lily blossoms are a nice addition to a tossed salad and while you're raiding your garden for lily blossoms, stop and gather some marigolds, which can be used to enhance a salad, or added to scrambled eggs. There's no end to the taste treats to be found in your flower garden, for rosebuds can be pickled, nasturtiums can be added to salads, violets made into tea, squash blossoms batter-fried and rose hips made into jelly.

And speaking of lilies, you might consider this next recipe as "gilding the lily," when all one asks for on a hot summer's day is a cooling dish of sherbet or ice cream. How much tastier (and fattening), a dish of peach or vanilla ice cream would be topped with

MELBA SAUCE

In a saucepan combine 2 c. fresh raspberries, or two 10 oz. pkgs. frozen raspberries, thawed and drained, 1/2 c. red currant jelly and 1/4 c. sugar, or to taste. Bring mixture to a boil over moderate heat, crushing the raspberries with the back of a spoon and simmer it, stirring, for 5 min., or until it is thickened. Force the sauce through a fine sieve with the back of a spoon into a bowl and, if desired, stir in 1 T kirsch, or to taste. Serve the sauce, chilled, over peach or vanilla ice cream. Makes about 1⅓ cups.

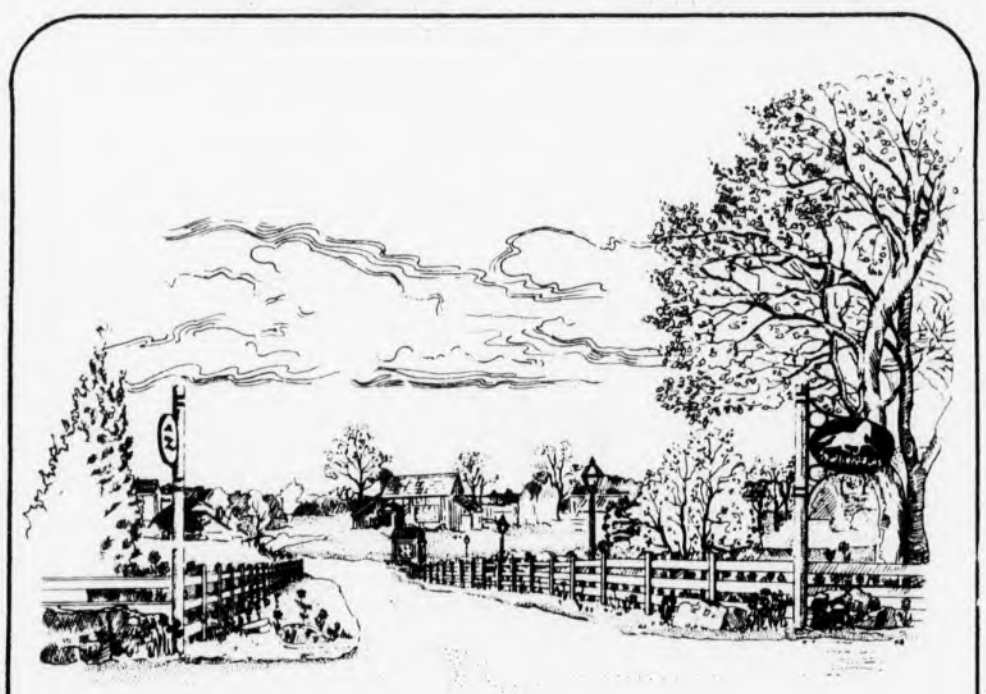
Vacations are Rx for families

Whether you are vacationing this summer or just enjoying your weekends, the season should provide you with opportunities for renewal, recreation and personal growth, according to a leading Boston-area family counseling expert.

"It's an excellent time for people to get to know their families better," says Rev. Robert Towner, MSW, a psychotherapist for Family Counseling and Guidance Centers, a nonprofit mental health clinic serving eastern Massachusetts.



"It's a time to avoid the 'dictator mentality' where one or two people make all the arrangements without input from the rest of the group," he cautions. "Actually, if vacation planning is approached properly it can be fun. It can also bring the family close together."

Rev. Towner stresses the need for discussion and negotiation when planning vacations and weekends. "There should be freedom of expression, with each person expressing his expectations and needs. It's a time for sensitivity and caring and compromise."

The family counseling expert says that the key to successful recreation is to make the time "life-giving" instead of "life-draining." While a lot of activity may benefit some people, he points out that others need quiet, unhurried time and a slower pace.

Rev. Towner notes that some people build pressure and tension while preparing for a vacation, adopt a "Hurry up so we can get there and relax" attitude, and then continue their hectic pace right on through the vacation period.

For those who would like to reflect on what family life is all about, the agency has a free brochure titled "What's a Family?" For your copy, call Family Counseling and Guidance Centers: Boston, 542-0903; Braintree, 848-7840; Marshfield, 837-1133.

The physicians who serve 'walk-in' patients

(Editor's Note: this is the second of a two-part series on medical centers on the South Shore. This week's article spotlights the physician who staff the centers, including the Rte. 3A Medical Center, Cohasset, the South Shore Health Care Center, Marshfield, the Hanover Medical Center, and the South Shore Medical Center, Norwell.)

By Jane Lane

The physicians who staff these walk-in medical centers are as individual as the facilities where they are employed.

Some of these doctors are just that - employees of a larger corporation which manages the clinic. Others are co-owners of the center, managers and primary employees of the establishment.

Dr. William Raskin, owner of the Rte.3A Medical Center, intended to exclude corporate interests, saying, "I like being my own boss."

Although Dr. Daniel Smith, a radiologist from Brockton, was a co-founder of the center, he now works at the Southeastern Medical Center in Hanson.

Raskin is a Cohasset resident, along with his wife, Joanne, the financial manager of center.

He realized when he was working at Goddard Hospital in Brockton, that many of the persons flowing into the emergency room, did not need hospitalization. What they did need, he says, is immediate medical attention which was not available to them in their community.

After studying the fairly new concept of walk-in medical centers, Raskin realized that emergency care outside a hospital setting would be a burgeoning trend in modern medicine.

"These medical centers are opening up at a rate of one and one-half a day across the country," he says. "There are about 2000 in America right now."

Raskin, who feels he received a broad-based education in emergency medicine during his residency, spent some time in the military on a South Dakota Indian reservation. There, he was called on to treat patients for a variety of ailments, since there were very few physician specialists.

He believes his center offers a more "personal touch," where a patient on a return visit, will likely see the same physician.

"I'd like to feel akin or related to the old family doctor in that I am not an employee of some massive corporation," he adds. "It is an unfortunate occurence in medicine that doctors are becoming employees rather than running their own offices.

But, I think it is good testimony to the the flexibility of the medical system that it can still respond to the patients' needs. There is a need for our type of service and the free enterprise system allows us to follow the public's need, and if we do a good job at it, we can make a decent living," Raskin adds.

"The bottom line," he maintains, "is that a good doctor, in my opinion, is honest with his patient and treats the patient with respect. The physician should know his limitations and abilities, whether he is a brain surgeon or general practioner."

Raskins says he is happiest "taking care of sick people," and has no plans to expand his business into other communities.

He is content serving the public from his Rte. 3A office. Just recently, he says, a woman came to the center for an examination. Because she suspected her nephew of being homosexual, she was afraid she may have contacted AIDS. The only thing Dr. Raskin could do for the frightened woman was to reassure she was not stricken with the disease.

Dr. Frederick Murphy, an eight-year resident of Ocean Bluffs in Marshfield, was recently named medical director of the South Shore Health Care Center.

He has been employed as an emergency room physician fulltime since 1975. He works at the center one day a week, although he stops by on his way home from the hospital every day.

He is excited about the concept of the South Shore Hospital opening satellite medical centers.

"This facility is open to the entire hospital staff," Murphy explains. "And in that way, it is much different than a one-man operation. We are operating from only 25 percent of the building now, so we have the potential to add on such facilities as dialysis machines, a doctor's office, an orthopedist and outpatient surgery."

Murphy is surprised to see the reception the center has received in Marshfield, saying ,"the place is really jumping."

He adds, "we're seeing about 40 or 50 patients a day, sometimes they are there when we open the doors. It is really gratifying to see good, quality medicine practiced there. And the unique thing is, we have the ability to refer the patients to one of 200 physicians associated with South Shore Hospital. We can get these patients taken care of promptly."

Murphy, a bachelor, began his intense interest in emergency medicine during his term with the Navy for one year in Vietnam. At Quang Tri he treated successive 'heavy casualties,"and was later transferred to the Bethesda Navy,Medical Center in Maryland.

He served at New England Deaconess Hospital during his residency in internal medicine, but returned to emergency medicine, realizing "it was the fastest growing specialty in the United States."

According to the Marshfield resident, "I couldn't think of anything more exciting, more immediate, than emergency medicine. A physician is using everything he has learned over the years, every day. I can't think of anything more satisfying.

Dr. Murphy cordially agreed to be interviewed while on duty in the emergency ward of the South Shore Hospital. While digging through a young man's anesthetized thumb, pulling out fragments of a splinter, Dr. Murphy answered questions without missing a stroke.

He says the hospital's emergency section is open day and night and thus must be staffed 24 hours per day. That in turn escalates the cost of medical care, which is hopefully being pulled into line by more cost efficient, walk-in medical centers, he adds.

He, and the physicians in the hospital's emergency ward, work in 12-hour shifts.

"The heavy stuff, the motor vehicle accidents and serious injuries, most often occur at night, especially on Friday and Saturday nights. Usually, the more minor problems are during the day. After a number of years I can estimate that, but I am often proved wrong," he chuckles.

Pompeo asked to deal with health board on well issue

By Patricia Anne Walsh

A letter has been sent to Dr. Roger Pompeo, former Health Board Chairman, telling him he is to deal with the board, and not Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos regarding wells.

Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos told the health board at a July 11 meeting, she wanted the board "to deal with Pompeo from now on," after he threatened "to sue."

Eliopoulos said Pompeo, of 130 Forest Avenue, was in the health board office one day and mentioned he was digging a well.

Half an hour later, Eliopoulos said John Riley, of M&R Associates asked if Eliopoulos realized Pompeo was digging 30 feet from the spot on the abutting land, where M&R had previously been given permission by the health board to construct a septic system.

Septic systems and wells are not allowed to be constructed within 100 feet of each other. Eliopoulos said she went and asked the well digger to cease digging so close to the M&R land.

Subsequently, she said, she learned the new well had been connected and was used.

"Pompeo says a well cannot be within 100 feet of a septic system - it does not say a proposed system," Eliopoulos added.

M&R and Pompeo have been involved in a suit for a few years. After the meeting Joan Murphy of M&R said they had reached a favorable settlement with Pompeo.

Chairman Marilyn Sweeney said "Pompeo may not want that lot developed." She said she has long felt we "can run into a lot of trouble with ground water and wells on Forest Avenue."

Pompeo usually knows what he is doing, Sweeney added.

Regarding Eliopoulos' attempt at jurisdiction over the digging of a well, Sweeney acknowledged the Health Board has rights to test wells.

However, she said, "I seem to remember investigating once before on well digging."

Under the state rules, the board has jurisdiction over testing for bacteria, but may not have direct control over where and when wells are dug, Sweeney said.

The board will investigate new state regulations.

Commuter boat subsidy advances in legislature

A House-Senate Conference Committee has approved $124,800 for funding for commuter boat services in the fiscal 1984 state budget.

The funding largely is slated for leasing of dock space, purchasing or leasing floats and marketing of all commuter boat services. In addition, a portion of the funding will be used for a harbor debris clean-up program.

State Sen. Allan McKinnon said this is an essential part of keeping the commuter boat system viable, noting that the "Gracious Lady," which operates between Hingham and Boston, was in dry dock this spring for extensive repairs after hitting a partially submerged object in the inner harbor.

"Debris in the harbor waters has been an ongoing concern because it poses a serious safety hazard and, as we have seen, it can result in lengthy service interruptions and significant repair costs to the boat owners," said McKinnon.

McKinnon obtained initial approval for the funding in the Senate following a request from the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction which oversees all commuter boat operations.

McKinnon said he was pleased that, although no funding for cummuter boat services appeared in the House version of the budget, the Conference Committee adopted the Senate recommendations and approved the money.

"With major reconstruction of the Southeast Expressway scheduled to begin next spring," said McKinnon, "we have an obligation to provide South Shore commuters with suitable alternatives to highway travel."

"Commuting by boat is an obvious alternative for many South Shore residents and this funding will help to keep the system in proper operation," he added.

McKinnon said he expects Governor Dukakis, long a supporter of commuter boat services, to approve the funding when the budget reaches his desk.

Buy water saving devices, commissioners urge

Sewer Commissioners are urging Cohasset residents to purchase water saving devices.

Water Commissioners Charles DeSantis and Edward Guild have repeatedly discussed at their meetings the need for businesses and homeowners to install watersaving devices. This would decrease the volume of water going throuth the sewer plant.

DeSantis and Guild sponsored a presentation for homeowners at town hall July 11 by the New Resources Group of Milford, N.H., a non-profit group. George Atkins of NRG said each fitted household will save on the average 40,000 gallons of drinking water and almost 40,000 gallons of sewer plant capacity.

Householders will save nearly $250 annually on energy costs for heating the water, according to NRG literature.

Aikens demonstrated a powerful flush with his demonstration see-through toilet tank at the end of the meeting. NRG toilet dams are semicircular coated spring steel which are sealed around the flush mechanism, and help direct the water.

Although another newspaper said the commission has "$10,000 left from last year which could go toward the conservation program," this appears to be incorrect.

The sewer commission has $10,000 unspent from Article 4 passed at the Nov. 29, 1982 Town Meeting. Town Counsel ruled that this money could not be spent for Ward Engineering, and "the money appears to be in limbo" according to Town Accountant William Signoreli.

The commission also has 10,001 remaining from Article 25 passed at the April 2 town meeting, Signorelli says, but this money must be spent for the voted purposes.

DeSantis says the commission may decide to ask the town through a Town Meeting Article to contribute toward the $15,000 expected cost for retro fitting every town bathroom. He agrees the commission does not presently have money to defray the cost of water saving devices.

Library receives a tree in honor of Evelyn Wood

A Liriodendron tree has been given to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library by Dr. and Mrs. Edward F. Woods in memory of Evelyn Wood, assistant librarian for 32 years.

Mrs. Woods wrote to the trustees that "this gift is from our four children, Bill, Anne, Susan and Jonathan — Evelyn stretched their minds, made avid readers of them all, was always wise and kind and fun in the books she helped them choose, even slipping an extra one into the weekly pile knowing the child hadn't chosen it but would enjoy it and grow from it."

Mrs. Woods writes "I am forever grateful to her — and happily she knew it. Four young adults are successfully pursuring their chosen paths because somebody way back when they were little, cared!"

Mrs. Woods is a library trustee.

Union files unfair labor practice

Trouble in the Fire Department

By Mike Berger

All is not at peace in the Fire Department.

There are conflicts between Fire Chief Martin Dooley, some of his officers, the firefighters union and selectmen.

The union has filed an unfair labor charge or prohibitive practice against Dooley.

The charge concerns the practice of using rules and regulations adapted in 1956 rather than the practice of using the rules and regulations approved in the firefighters contract.

Union President William Protulis said the union feels the chief should use the contract as a standard for enforcing rules and regulations.

"This contract is a complete agreement between the union and the town. The rules and regulations used by the chief , we have had no chance to bargain with," he said.

A hearing will be scheduled by the state labor board on the charge.

The union is also supporting firefighter Jim Runey's Civil Service appeal of Dooley's decision to suspend Runey for abuse of sick leave. Selectmen backed Dooley on his decision.

In an interview Dooley acknowledged the problem goes much deeper than these two incidents.

It goes back to the firefighters union support for Capt. Roger Lincoln as chief and the reluctance to support an out-of-town appointment.

In addition, the problem, said Dooley, also stems from the support given by Executive Secretary Mark Lanza and selectmen.

Dooley has met with selectmen several times in executive session and was reluctant to disclose what was discussed.

But he feels the public should know what he is up against as he tries to supervise the department.

"I know I may get in trouble for this but I have always been open with the press and the public and I shouldn't stop here," said Dooley.

"I do not have the total backing from all the selectmen and not from the executive secretary. There is a difference of interpretation on control on a day to day operation and I am frustrated from interference," he said.

"However, I have 100 percent cooperation from the call force and from the feedback from the street I feel it is 99 percent in my favor," Dooley said.

Dooley was asked if the frustration would lead him to resigning.

"Absolutely not. I thrive on a challenge and this is a challenge. When I took this job I took it with a total commitment to the community. I have found nothing yet to convince me to throw myself out the door," Dooley said.

Town agrees to low income housing

By Cindi Bondi

The signed agreement for low income housing could close the financial gap between Cohasset and the state and provide Atlantic Avenue residents with a water main.

Under the agrement "the town will affirmatively apply for state scattered-site family public housing...and will investigate other state and federal housing assistance programs."

The agreement says selectmen will affirm "the town's commitment to actively work to ensure that its policies and actions do not tend to unresonably exclude housing development."

Selectman Frank England said last week the agreement is general and left open to interpretation. "What is reasonable here may not be reasonable, for example, in Chelsea."

The Cohasset Housing Authority cast the first unanimous vote to sign the state agreement for low income housing.

Under the agreement tenants will pay 17 percent rent and all utilities and the state will pay for all other costs.

The Planning Board favored the agreement and Selectman Chairman Mary-Jane McArthur said the selectmen would sign the pact at Wednesday's meeting.

Housing Authority Chairman Lloyd Prescott said, "I'm not convinced that we will win funds for sewerage."

But Housing Authority member Leo Happenny said, "If we sign the agreement then we will put selectmen in a better standing to be financed for the water main project."

The agreement will be signed with the understanding that Cohasset will control stipulations of low income housing.

Early in the meeting, the Housing Authority voted to favor an amendment which said "The Housing Authority will also have the right to show preference to Cohasset residents or children of present or past residents."

However, Housing Authority members John Muncey and Marguerite Libby asked to withdraw this motion.

Selectman John DeBassio added, "This agreement allows us to perceive this issue in our best interest, this is a beginning. It does not obligate us to anything."

Planning Board member Robert Sturdy said, "I think the amendment is very discriminatory. What we are really looking for is a commitment in philosophy and policy. If we find a better way to serve the town with low income housing than this agreement does not limit us from it."

Both Muncey and Selectman Rocco Laugelle said

Chiefs favor dispatcher oppose commissioner

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Both the fire and police chiefs agree they will support a town committee's study of a possible hiring of a central civilian dispatcher for both the Fire and Police Depts.

The Town Government Structure Committee invited Police Chief Joseph Kealey and Fire Chief Martin Dooley to a meeting to discuss their relationships with selectmen and other town boards.

Other topics discussed included the possibility of one central dispatcher and a public safety chief.

Although supporting the dispatcher idea both chiefs are opposed to a proposal to one Public Safety Commissioner instead of two chiefs.

The meeting also gave Dooley and Kealey, newly appointed chiefs their first opportunity to tell the public the problems with their positions and departments.

In separate interviews Kealey and Dooley said a police officer might be on duty in the station to answer calls from citizens regarding legal questions.

The chiefs also said hiring dispatchers might mean hiring four people if all three shifts, vacations and sick days will be covered.

Committee members interviewing Kealey and Dooley included Chairman Donna McGee, Burk Ketcham,

Joanne Winters is a fixture at Hugo's

By Moira McCarthy

Joanne Winters has seen Hugo's Lighthouse go from one end of the success spectrum to the other, and she believes that these days are the best.

"The only thing that's stayed the same (since the new owners took over in January 1982) is the view," Winters told the Mariner. "The place is so visibly changed, and it's far more up and coming. It's now a very management oriented restaurant."

Winters first came to Hugo's 17 years ago as a cashier. Three months into her job, at the tender age of 18, the legendary John Carzis asked her if she wanted to become a function manager.

She confessed that even at the low pay and outrageous hours, there was no way she could turn down such an opportunity. "I was given all that responsibility, and that's learning in the most invaluable way," she said.

At that time, Hugo's was owned by John Carzis, who Winters said "made the name Hugo's what it is today."

"Carzis was very influential," she said. Behind her is a collage of photos, one with Carzis shaking hands with JFK, another with him embracing Robert Goulet. Yet another photo shows him displaying a juicy, hot lobster. "He was Hugo's," she added.

But things weren't all in order at that time.

"Carzis was dedicated. I mean he literally died in the business. But he was dedicated in a different way. He was the type that carried everything he owned in his back pocket. The old way was commendable, but it had so many ills," she said.

When Carzis died, the business was passed on to his nephew, Ted Vallas. "He was a family member, so it was like his son being there. People came in, and felt like Carzis was still there."

Electric rate increase requested

The state DPU is considering a $6.8 million rate increase request of Eastern Edison Company, which serves Cohasset and Scituate customers.

The DPU announced that it has scheduled a public hearing for this rate case in Brockton at the City Council Chambers, 45 School Street, Tuesday, August 23 at 7:00 p.m.

Eastern Edison submitted its proposed 4.5 percent rate request with the DPU. The rates were scheduled to go into effect on August 1, but the DPU, according to its standard practice, suspended the effective date of the rate increase until Feb. 1, 1984.

During the suspension period, the DPU will conduct hearings to evaluate the reasons for the Company's rate request and will determine what amount of increase may be warranted.

The company's last general rate case was decided by the DPU November 9, 1982, when Eastern Edison received a $3.6 billion rate increase, compared to the $10 million increase requested by the utility firm.

Harbormaster Appointments

Four new appointments were made to assist harbormaster Harry Ritter. James Curley and Thomas Wismore are night patrolmen. Edward B. Long is in charge of the Little Harbor and Joseph Becker is assistant harbormaster. All appointees will serve from July 20 to Nov. 1.

Attention singles

In mid-October the Mariner will publish a unique supplement, "Single on the South Shore."

This publication will be an apprised reflection of the lifestyles of men and women (more than 25 years old) who conduct their lives alone.

It will include those who've never married, and those who used to be but now live alone.

The Mariner is interested in talking with single parents with or without custody; those who are outright nifty (a self-determination to start with); those who've been single a short time or a long one.

In short, we are researching all aspects of lifestyles of adults who live on the South Shore, unattached. That's figured to be, believe it or not, at least 25 per cent of our population.

On Thursday, Aug. 11, the Mariner staff will meet with single men and women at the Bridgwaye Inn, Humarock Beach, Marshfield, 7 to 10 p.m., cash bar. Everyone is welcome. Participation in the publication by interview and information will be explained at that time.

Access to town counsel

Selectmen chairman Mary Jane McArthur said a draft of the procedures for access to town counsel will be rewritten and brought back to the board for a vote.

McArthur said, "The Board of Selectmen has to have some control over who is using the town counsel and why, in order to keep financial records."

Robert Sturdy, planning board member, said, "It is not appropriate for the Board of Selectmen to restrict the planning board's use (of town counsel) through the formality of first seeing the executive secretary."

Laugelle dismissal hearing

Cedar Street Dump Supervisor, Joseph Laugelle, who the Board of Health wants to terminate will have an open hearing with selectmen at 8 p.m., Thursday, July 28 at Town Hall.

Trouble in the Fire Department

Exective Secretary Mark Lanza also acknowledged there are personnel problems in the Fire Dept. But he also said he backs Dooley on his management stance.

But with that support Lanza also added it doesn't mean the chief can't be constructively criticized by selectmen or Lanza for measures taken.

"I perceive the problems as a personality rather than questioning the man's ability. The problems can be worked out but it will be difficult," said Lanza.

"I have already told the chief this but the public should know the chief has the unanimous backing of men. But like any other employee there are always areas of improvement but if I have suggestions or criticisms of the chief, especially in a supervisory capacity, it doesn't mean I don't support him.

"If I don't support a department head, he has to be pretty bad," Lanza said.

Dooley acknowledges the problems focus on four to six men including an acting officer and a captain.

Dooley refused to name the officers but sources have told the Mariner the officers are Lincoln and Acting Captain and School Committee Chairman Dick Conley. Conley is now out on sick leave.

"I realize I am the new man with new ideas and I know every idea isn't going to please everybody. There are differences but I feel they can be worked out. It's going to take a little give and take from both sides," Dooley said.

"People say I come from the old school of the strong type department chief, ironhandedness and 'I am the boss - don't bother me. "

"But I don't believe in that and if I come across as that it is not intentional.

"However the old school and the old ways are not totally obsolete in this age in the public sector. In a Police and Fire Dept you have to realize this is a semi military organization and sometimes individuals who have not had the experience of military life have a hard time dealing with someone brought up in this atmosphere," Dooley said.

Regarding rules and regulations, Dooley said that is paramount to any department and the last set of rules adapted and accepted by the town goes back to 1956 and 1938.

Dooley acknowledges the rules may be out of date but he is ready, willing and able to sit down with selectmen and or the union to hammer out new ones.

Commenting on the men who are opposed to his management practices, Dooley said it didn't make a difference who was appointed chief.

"It is their attitude toward any new chief from the outside regardless of whether it was me. They feel outsiders are not capable of running the department and they resent the fact the town went the other way," Dooley said.

"Right from the beginning I said a firefighter's job has to be fulltime and what I found is some men have the attitude that the job is part-time and their interests on the outside come first." he said.

"I can't buy that and I will never buy it," Dooley said. The chief stopped the traditional practice of some of the firefighters working on boating equipment on Fire Dept time.

"The men have a total dedication to the operations of this department and the total welfare of its citizens," Dooley said.

He also acknowledged some of the selectmen feel his changes are coming too quickly but Dooley feels the changes are coming at a snail's pace.

Outside of his office he heard the television "blaring" and it upset them. "That bothers me. I wish the men took the time for training , fire prevention or other Fire Dept. matters."

Winters is a fixture at Hugo's

But things were beginning to slow down at this time, much because of rapid management changes. One manager left, another came. Then that one left. then Winters herself took the reins as general manager.

"At that time at least the books got in order. We made a profit, although it was only marginal," she said.

"But we still did have the comradeship that has always existed between our employees," she added. Indeed, many of the waiters and waitresses had worked at Hugo's for close to 40 years, and many were sons and daughters of other employees. "We literally watched some of them grow up," Winters said.

And then came rumors, and finally an announcement, that Hugo's was to be sold.

"I wondered if the comradery would stay after the new owners came in. We were hiring all new everything, and I wasn't sure if that feeling could be the same."

But Winters ended up pleasantly surprised. "For a new group, they're very close knot and cohesive. There's a real family feeling here."

And business has improved in every way.

"The only thing that stayed the same was the name. The owners really bought the name. Business is better than ever, and still on an increase," she said.

Winters attributes this to the new look (the entire restaurant, from the restrooms to the kitchen to the end of the dining room, is brand new), and to a great improvement in the a la carte meals. "Our product is much more consistent now," she added.

Winters has gone back to her original post of function manager, and she's very happy with how things are looking there.

"I'm booked for functions into September, 1984. That's six months longer than I traditionally knew it to be. I love functions, and I can do them well with the management system that is here today. It's relaxed, but secure. It's so well run, oraganized, and supported. These owners are here for the long run. They have a love affair with the place.

"These owners bought the Hugo's name and brought it back to where it once was. That's a great tribute to Carzis."

"With her 17 years of non-stop service, a lot of that credit must belong to Winters.

Town boards agree to low income housing any plans for low income housing will be based on plans submitted to the state from the Housing Authority or selectmen.

Prescott said, "The Housing Authority is autonomous. The title lies not with the town or the state but with the Cohasset Housing Authority and with no expense to the town but on state funds."

He added the state will pay for any low income housing plans. This could even require them to fund a survey to designate a low income housing area."

Some voters of the agreement signed with the idea the stae agreement would never materialize. "The state would be more than foolish to fund the state pact in this town," said Sturdy. "Why would the state pay three times as much to fund low income housing in Cohasset when they could fund other competing (lower costing) towns?"

Prescott said, "Putting the state pact into action is long in coming in Cohasset."

Other officials still feel that this agreement is a threat. "Once we sign this agreement we'll be called to act on it. The state is holding us up (on the water main project) with blackmail," said Diane Sullivan, a resident of Jerusalem Road.

Happenny said, "We are just being a little bit cooperative, Mrs. Sullivan. We don't have to go all the way with this. We have plenty of protection laws."

Housing Authority Executive Director Barbara Clain said that Duxbury has a similar program of seven low income housing units. Duxbury recommended such a successful program.

As a result of the signed agreement the Water Commission is expected to approve construction of a water main project on Atlantic Avenue.

Saying it is a "race against the clock," Water Commissioner Peter Pratt said they did not want to okay the construction project until and if the state releases the $174,612 grant needed to complete the $400,000 water main rehabilitation.

The project was scheduled to begin by Sept. 15 "at the latest," according to Pratt. But the commission has placed it on hold until some direction is given by the state that necessary funding will not be withheld by the office of Communities and Development.

"We don't want to owe some engineer $20,000 and not be able to pay him," he explained. "We could open ourselves up to some lawsuits if we began the project without knowing the funds were definitely forthcoming."

Until selectmen agree to sign the memorandum, and the state agrees to release the money, the water commission has "basically shut off" the planned water main project on Atlantic Avenue, Pratt said.

Family story hour Aug 11

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites children and their parents to a family story hour on Monday, Aug. 1 at 7:30 p.m.

This is the fourth program in a series of five evening programs for family enjoyment.

Jane MacFarlene, formerly of the Fields Corner Branch, Boston Public Libraary, will tell a variety of folk tales, beginning with the Magic Pot by Patricia Coombs.

Her other stories will include "Four Hairs from the Bear to the Devil," a West Indian folktale, "How Anansi Got A Bald Head," a folktale from Africa, and "Here-afterthis," an English folktale.

Walking tour

The Cohasset Historical Society is planning the second of its three Sunday afternoon walking tours of historic Cohasset, "Pilgrimage to Cohasset's Past - A Maritime Heritage."

For two centuries Cohasset was a seafaring community and its harbor was the center of the town's livelihood.

Sunday, August 7 at 3 p.m., tourists can walk with society guides to relive the great 'Age of Sail" of this old New England fishing village.

Lifesaving course

The second session of the advanced lifesaving course will begin July 28 and continue through August 26 at the Cohasset Swim Center.

Anyone interested in the program should contact Susan Buckley at 383-0030.

Registration for the third session of Red Cross swimming instruction will be held August 5 from 8 to 11:30 a.m. at the Cohasset Swim Center.

Second session if full. Over 200 children are participating

around town

☐Stephen C. Perry was awarded the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute Medal for outstanding achievements in the study of mathematics and science during his junior year at Cohasset High School. He is the son of Stephen Perry of 100 Linden Drive.

☐Beechwood Street travelers report that motorists should take the route soon to admire the gorgeous yellow tree on Jean Higgins' lawn (at the upper corner of Beechwood Street and Todd Road. This is commonly known as a Golden Rain Tree, but Jean reports that several years ago Lucille McLaughlin (known for her leadership of the Friends of the Library) chased down the Latin name through the Arnold Arboretum—a tongue-twisting Koelreuteria Paniculata. The twin of the beautiful bloomer (both were planted by the late Howard Bates when he was the Tree Warden) suffered some damage in its youth, so it is smaller and doesn't bloom regularly. By Wednesday, the blooms will have begun to go by. Hurry to see this spectacular sight.

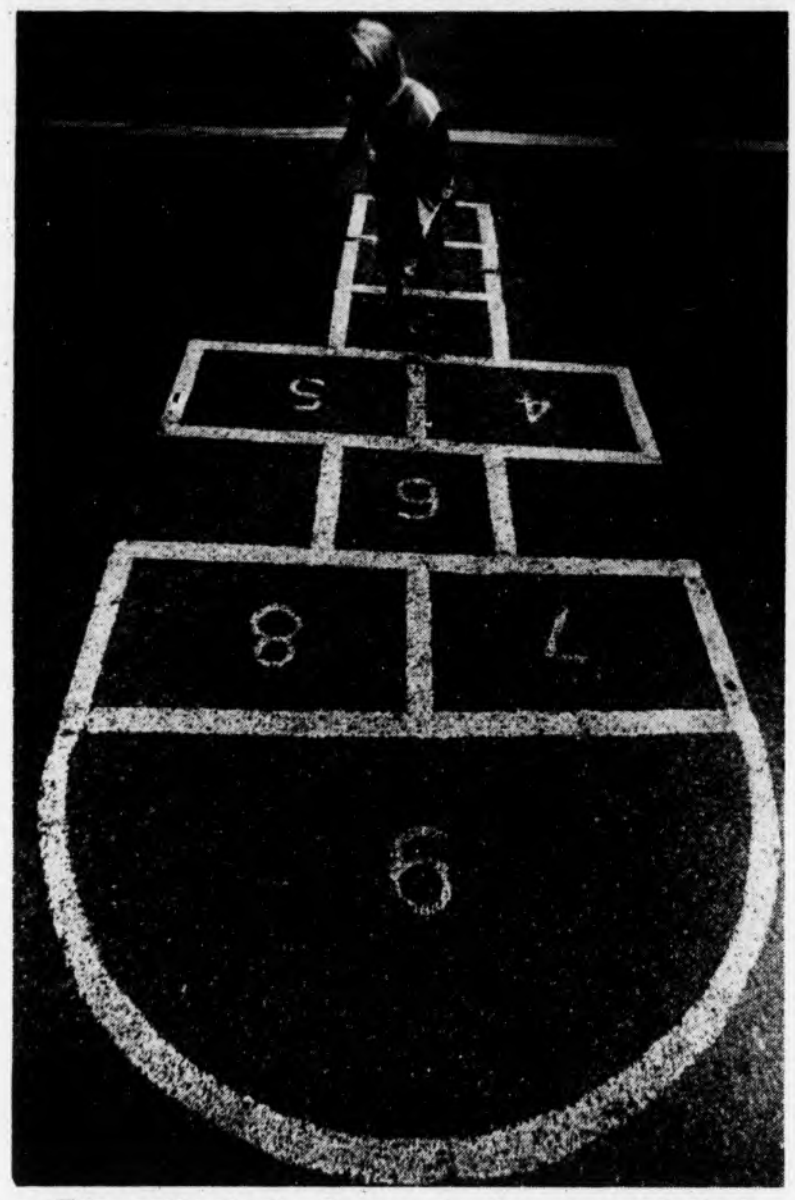
☐While on the subject of horticulture, hope everyone saw the July issue of Better Homes and Gardens. One of the big features was a "Prizewinning Garden from Scrubland," featuring Cohasset's own Peter and Patty Abbott. It tells the whole story of how the garden went from wasteland to a 40x100-foot size and the pictures are beautiful! The Abbotts won first prize in a national contest sponsored by Crockett's Victory Garden.

Mary Good paints a water color on the Common. The restrained pooch is a stranger.

☐Carla Lucas and Gia Barresi are members of a softball team which is "awesome." The Weymouth Pirates have won the state tournament and are on their way to the New England regionals (in Springfield). The nationals will be held in Boulder, Colorado, and the final attempt at the World Cup will be held in Canada. If confidence is the name of the game in this sport, they should go all the way with no problem at all!

☐Izzie Salvador, Polly Litchfield and Judy Kulturides had a super trip recently. The three took the ferry to Nantucket and spent a couple of days taking in the sights . . . "they had a ball!" They spent some time with Jack and Doris Golden, who spent their vacation there. Izzie did such a super job organizing their adventure that she was nominated tour director for any future trips that might be planned.

☐One person definitely wants the heat wave to end as rapidly as possible. Linda Jorgenson fractured her leg last month and the hot and heavy cast is really getting to her! Linda would love nothing more than to swim.



☐Cliff Jones recently explained the lobster shortage. The biggest reason can be attributed to the Big Blizzard, when all of the baby lobsters were washed up on the beaches. Although the lobstermen tried to scoop them up and throw them over Cunningham Bridge, it must not have been enough. Those lobsters should be of "catching" size this year.

☐It seems that half of Cohasset must have been on the "high seas" bluefishing last weekend. Steven, Jay and Troy caught their share, making many Sunday diners happy.

☐Don't forget to go to the Ripley Road Nursing Home's Fair this Saturday. There are a lot of bargains, as well as a lot of fun.

☐Terry England Duggan had a special honor at her recent wedding. Her cake was cut by her grandfather's sword, thus beginning an "English tradition."

☐Poor Herb Crehan...he had a happy 40th birthday several weeks ago, but has had to suffer the indignities of a slip of the pen in an Around Town item that incorrectly claimed he'd been enjoying his 41st birthday! The confusion stems from the fact that he thinks in "years," therefore, as his 40th birthday approached, he said he didn't mind because he'd been in his 40th year for almost 12 months and found it wasn't too bad. After making one mistake, it would be too rude to mention which year he's living in now!

☐Don't forget this column is made up of information received by you, the reader. Keep those phone calls coming with the events that are going on in your family. We're all interested! And, everyone loves to see their name in the news!

Editorial

A courteous solution

We have a theory that the decline of civilization can be measured in the number of relatively minor matters that cannot be settled over a martini — and without the aid of lawyers, judges, process servers, legislators, editorial writers, and other denizens of the unproductive sector of society.

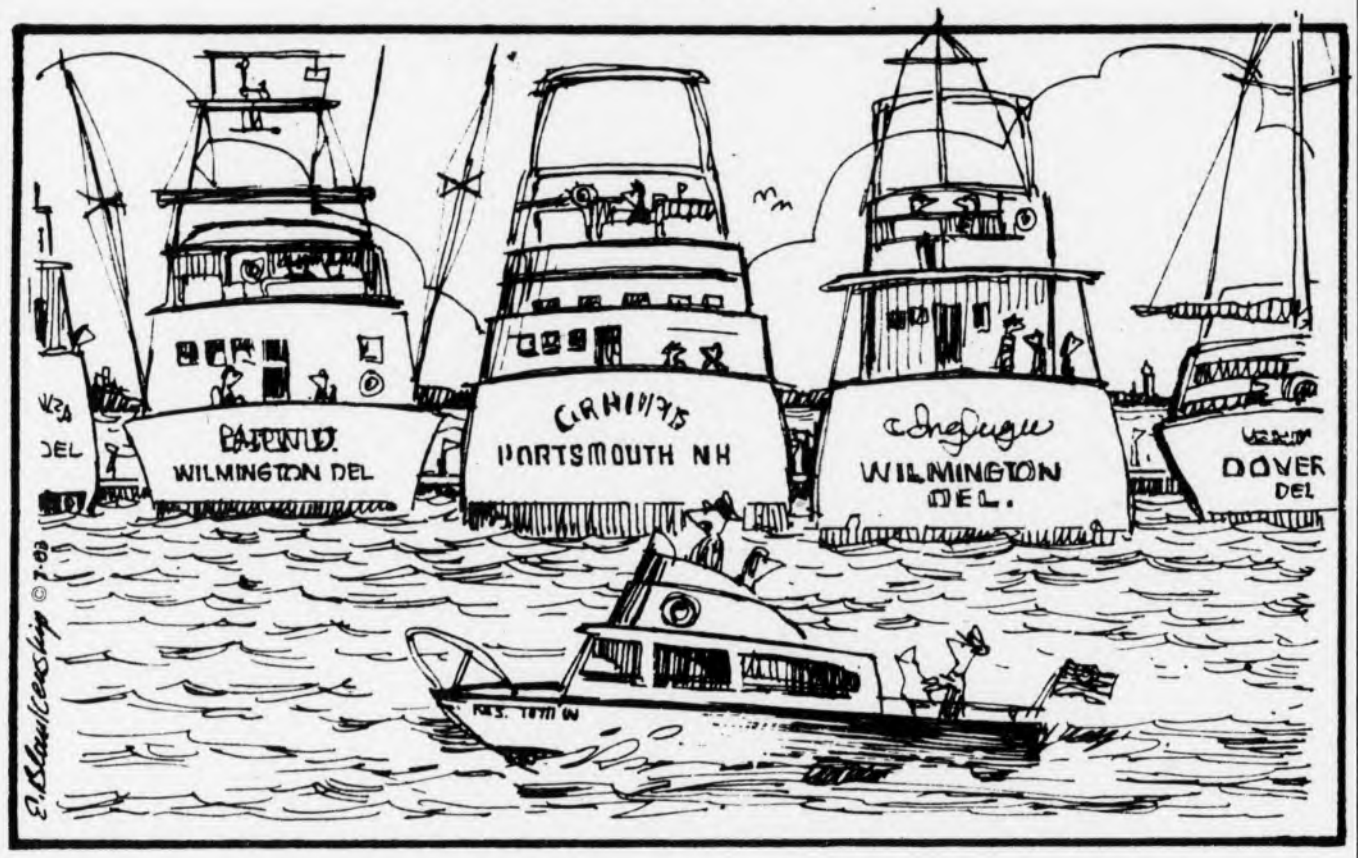
In the recent past one thinks of the case of the famous fence around the Bell's tennis court, which on account of its giving offense to a neighbor the town spent years and thousands of tax dollars in futile litigation.

At present one thinks of the case of the early morning noise problem at the condominium development at 100 Pond St. Here a developer is constructing condominia at a furious rate. The rate is so furious, in fact, that it begins near dawn's early light, thus awakening and infuriating the surrounding neighborhood.

If ever there were an issue that ought to be settled over a martini and a pretzel, this is it. The neighborhood ought to understand that for the developer time is money, and after a deluvian springtime, it is imperative to make the most of good, dry summer days.

By the same token the developer (Thayer & Associates of Cohasset) ought to understand that no one likes to be awakened at 6:30 every morning to the sound of a backhoe.

With a little Golden Rule thus thrown at the problem by both sides, some sort of mutually satisfactory solution ought to be reached fast — and without a summit at Camp David.



Alas, a workable compromise has thus far eluded the parties. Although Frederick Thayer, Jr., of Thayer & Associates has agreed in principle not to rev up his backhoes until 7:30 as selectmen have requested, neighbors report they continue to be blasted out of their dreamworld prior to 7 a.m.

Our inclination with such quarrels is to call them down the middle and to look for the good intentions in all. However, we did not find it a sign of good intention when in response to our inquiry Mr. Thayer demanded to know by whose authority the Mariner presumed to ask him questions about his company's operating procedures.

We listened hopefully for some comment that would unmask concern on the company's part for those residents — some sick, some elderly, some mere working stiffs who need what shut-eye they can get — who have been inconvenienced. The most encouraging comment Mr. Thayer would make was to repeat his agreement with the selectmen's letter asking for quiet until 7:30 a.m.

Many witnesses report that "agreement" has not yet been translated into silence. At this juncture, common courtesy dictates that the reasonable request of the neighborhood and of selectmen be acceded to with the same stunning speed with which Thayer & Associates no doubt hope their future requests for variances and exemptions will be acted upon.

NEWS ITEM — State Revenue Department sets up for crackdown on delinquent boat sales taxes. Many area harbor boat 'residents' are registered out of state. Wilmington, Delaware; most popular along with Portsmouth, New Hampshire. Net would be $2,000,000. Huge job for harbormasters

"...Better check the navigation charts, Ed. Looks like we overshot by a couple of states...!"

Who me, superstitious?

By Claire McDonough

"Do you have $3?" I asked the Dragon. "I have to make 20 copies of something."

He fished for his wallet. "Will $3 be enough?"

"Um, no. I'll need another $4 for stamps."

He looked at me suspiciously. "Are you sending out another chain letter?"

"Of course not. Well, maybe. There isn't any money involved," I added hastily, "and it's very religious. At the top it has a quote from Matthew's gospel."

The Dragon sighed. "I can't believe my ears. You went to St. Mark's Grammar School, St. Gregory's High School and Emmanuel College. You have a responsible position in the state administration. Yet you not only fall for every superstition that comes down the pike, you actually tell me that no money is involved seconds after you hit me up for $7."

"I'm not really superstitious," I told him, "but why take chances? I mean, this chain originated with a missionary in Venezuela. It says if I send out 20 copies I'll get a surprise."

"I guarantee that," he muttered darkly. "By the way, you just spilled some salt. Throw some over your shoulder."

"See! Everyone's suspicious about something," I told him triumphantly. "As a matter of fact, you wouldn't walk under a ladder the other day."

"That had nothing to do with superstition. Patrick was at the top of the ladder with a bucket of red paint."

"You won't let a black cat cross your path."

"Only one particular cat, and I don't like the way he looks at me. Face it, Claire. My, um, idiosyncracies are harmless. You believe in everything from phrenology to the little tags on tea bags. There is absolutely no substance to that chain letter."

"Ha!" I rejoined. "That's what Joe Elliot thought. It says here that he received $650,000 and lost it because he broke the chain. And some general in the Phillipines failed to circulate it. He died, but before his death he received $75,000. Probably his wife mailed out the copies, and she inherited the money."

He sighed again. "No one ever made any money sending out chain letters. It is nothing but superstition of the most rank type."

"Oh yeah? What about Constantine Xus? It says here he had his secretary send out 20 copies and he later won $2,000,000 in the lottery."

"If the chain worked," the Dragon explained patiently, "his secretary would have won the money."

I folded. "You're right. I won't send it out. Probably Carol Naditt would have lost his job even if he did send the chain to 20 people. I'll just tear it up. Nothing bad will happen. Knock on wood."

Dog regulations emphasized by selectmen

To the Editor:

It has come to the attention of the Board of Selectmen that proper dog control is not being exercised in the Town of Cohasset. The Board reminds citizens that dog control is the responsibility of the dog owner.

Article VII, Section 12 of the Town Bylaw clearly states:

"No person shall keep any dog which by biting, barking, or any other activity disturbs the peace and quiet of any neighborhood or endangers the safety of any person. No dog shall be permitted to run upon public or private property without express permission of the owner, occupant or custodian of such property. The dog officer shall impound any dog found to be in violation of these provisions."

Dogs must be licensed yearly. Licenses may be obtained at the Town Clerk's office during the regular Town Hall business hours. M.G.L., Chapter 140, section 141 states that the Court shall impose a forfeiture of not less than five no more than 15 dollars as a penalty for failure to license a dog.

All dogs shall be vaccinted against rabies by a licensed veterinarian upon reaching the age of six months or within 30 days after entry into the Town. Vaccinated dogs shall be revaccinated periodically in accordance with rules and regulations adopted and promulgated by the Department of Public Health.

A copy of Commonwealth of Mass. "Laws Relating to Dogs," may be obtained at the office of the Town Clerk or Board of Selectmen at the Town Hall. All dog owners are encouraged to pick up a copy and read it.

The Dog Officer for the Town of Cohasset is Richard Yocum. He may be reached at 383-1055 or 545-4728.

Congressman Studds comments on the censure

(U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds issued the following comments following his censure by the House last week:)

On Wednesday of this past week, the House of Representatives rejected the recommendation of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct that I be "reprimanded" for improper conduct involving a House page ten years ago. The House voted, instead, to "censure" both myself and Rep. Daniel Crane of Illinois. That action is stronger and results, under the rules of the Democratic Caucus, in the loss of my position as Chairman of the House Subcommittee on Coast Guard and Navigation.

In last week's "Weekly Report," I included the full text of the statement which I made on the House floor concerning the recommendation of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct. That statement, which explains the reasons why I have chosen not to contest the Committee's recommendation, is available through any of our three district offices.

Over the past week, I have received literally thousands of calls, letters, and telegrams from around the country, but primarily from the people of the Tenth Congressional District. The vast majority of these communications have expressed sympathy, understanding, help and support. All Members of Congress are in need of humbling experiences from time to time. But I have never been made so aware of the capacity for decency and strength of the American people as I have been contemplating your reaction to the events of the past eight days. I want my colleagues in the House of Representatives, my friends, supporters and my constituents — whether supporters or not — to know how much I regret that my own very serious error in judgment has subjected them to this ordeal. Your friendship and trust have meant an enormous amount to me, and I will, I hope, emerge from the present situation a wiser, a more tolerant, and a more complete human being.

I also intend to continue doing the best job I possibly can as a Member of the House of Representatives. The challenges of public policy which we all face at the present time demand no less.

The armed forces of El Salvador have perpetrated or tolerated the murder of 25,000 Salvadoran civilians over the past four years. During roughly that same period, the United States Coast Guard has saved almost precisely the same number of human lives. I have a responsibility both to myself and to the people who have elected me to continue to speak out vigorously on these issues and I fully intend to do so.

I will be returning home in the near future to continue with our 16th round of town-by-town Open Meetings. I look forward to talking with many of you personally at that time.

Communicating with communication people

By Judy Foley

"It's amazing what strides man has taken in the field of communications...

Communicating with the Federal Communications Commission itself can be a unique experience. Combined with another giant in the communications field, the Telephone Company, it can be an outright ordeal.

It was a simple request for a little communication; a passage of information from one man to another. The Mariner wanted some information on a proposed low-power TV station in Norwell with a 400-foot transmission tower near a residential section in Hanover.

The FCC is considering two applications for the license, and seemed like the logical place to find the information. And "Information" — the 411 number — seemed like the best place to start.

..."Informationwhatcityplease?"

"Boston, the Federal Communications Commission, please."

A general information number for the FCC was spewed out in the same monotone. 'Thankyouverymuch." Click.

...No answer. The FCC wasn't communicating today? Perhaps after lunch.

...The phone to the giant federal agency was finally answered with a meek, "Hello?"

'Is this the FCC?"

"Look," said an exasperated voice on the other end. "This is a residential number. I don't know why the telephone company has this listed under the FCC, but I've been getting calls all week. If you call information again, will you tell them they have the wrong number listed? Maybe they'll listen to you." Click.

..."Informationwhatcityplease?"

"You gave me a residential number for the Federal Communications Commission and some shmuck is getting calls for the FCC all day."

"You got a wrong number from us?"

"That's right. Can you make a note and give me the right number?

"I'm sorry but I can't do anything about a wrong number. You can speak to a supervisor."

"Okay. Please." Click.

..."This is the supervisor." Same story.

"But this is local information. We're not supposed to have any number for the FCC. You'll have to call 1-555-1212 for that number." Click.

..."Informationwhatcityplease?" Same request.

"Thatnumberis 223-6607. Thankyouverymuch." Click.

..."Hello, this is the FCC. This recording will provide information on where to file complaints on interference... The number to call for other information is 617-223-6609." Slam.

..."Federal Communications Commission. Can I help you?" At last, a real person, a nice lady who listened to the request. But no potatoes.

She explained that the FCC releases information on applications to the public because of the federal Right to Know law, but all information goes through a commercial outfit. Freedom of information for a fee.

Besides, the nice lady said, all applications for low-power TV stations are handled through the Washington, D.C. office.

That number, if anyone's interested, is 202-632-7000. Somehow it just doesn't seem important anymore.

Murray's Memos

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

Budgets

Thirteen days into the new fiscal year, the House and Senate approved the state budget. In general, Republicans in both chambers voted against the spending plan arguing that the budget is bloated and out of balance. The $7.26 billion budget contains funding for super-bureaucracies created by Governor Dukakis and the increases over last year's spending far exceed any inflationary factors. On the other side of the balance sheet, opponents of the budget say that it is precariously balanced with $94 million essentially borrowed from teachers' retirement funds and already committed collective bargaining money. Members argued in debate that because this is not a balanced budget, we will most likely see a number of deficiency budgets throughout the year. Legislators and taxpayers will be watching carefully.

N.H. Child Rape Case

The controversial decision, made public last week in New Hampshire caused us to take a closer look at the Massachusetts child abuse reporting law.

The case involved a man who had reported to child abuse authorities that a 12-year old had been raped and that he had committed the act. Because New Hampshire law protects an individual who reports child abuse, in good faith, to the proper authorities from civil or criminal liability, the New Hampshire judge determined that this man could not be prosecuted. (As of this writing, the case was being challenged.)

Massachusetts law contains a similar protection clause. The reason, of course, is to protect teachers, school nurses, doctors, etc. and to encourage such people who would have reason to suspect child abuse to make reports to protect the child.

Upon reviewing our child abuse reporting statute and discovering a similar loophole, House Republican Leader William G. Robinson filed legislation to correct the law by specifying that an individual who reports child abuse, be excluded from any protection from civil or criminal penalties.

Meanwhile, another child abuse bill filed earlier in the year as part of the Republican legislative package, has reached the Governor's desk and is expected to be signed into law soon. The bill, originally sponsored by Assistant Republican Leader Iris K. Holland (R-Longmeadow) improves the child abuse reporting law by requiring that serious child abuse be reported not only to the Department of Social Services, but also to the District Attorney. (I am a co-sponsor of both above mentioned bills.)

Ideas?

Summertime, when the Legislature is not in formal session, we have the time to plan for the coming year, to research new ideas and draft legislation for the next session.

Our laws are only useful if they serve to help and protect the people of Massachusetts. If you have an idea for legislation, or if there are issues that you think we should be working on, please call or write.

Trial Run for TV

A trial run for television in the Massachusetts House of Representatives was held recently.

Wednesday, July 13, the budget was passed overwhelmingly. Only 23 members voted against the Conference Committee report on the largest budget ever to be submitted. This was the first day for legislative television.

This was also the day that Capital outlay budget was presented to the House members. This late filed bill called for $1,536,479 for television equipment and for payment to whichever television company is selected.

I do not support television coverage of legislative sessions. However, I said, "I could not vote to spend over a million dollars for television in the House. Any company who wants to televise our proceedings should not charge the taxpayers for what I consider a public service."

Last week the bill passed the House in a roll call vote, 120 yes to seven no. I am very disappointed with this decision.

David Chittim guides the library through troubled waters

By Theresa Sullivan

In spite of fiscal cutbacks, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library has retained its homey atmosphere and good service, according to the library board chairman.

But the library board of trustees is not resting on its laurels.

There is room for improvement, said Board of Trustees Chairman David Chittim.

In an interview Chittum discussed the reasons for the library's popularity among Cohasset residents.

Dick Hayes, head librarian, deserves much of the credit for the efficiency of the library, according to Chittim.

"What the library is today is due to the fact that he's been there for 14 years."

The librarian is appointed by the trustees.

Evelyn Wood, deceased, was largely responsible for the library's warmth, Chittim said. "The people of Cohasset loved her. She left her stamp in the library. You can go and sit and read and be very comfortable." The library received an endowment from residents of $6,500 in memory of Evelyn Wood.

He said the contribution the Friends of the Library has made over the past 15 years since its beginning is invaluable. "They're very dedicated. Their work is excellent. They're very conscientious and faithful," Chittim said. "They actually give us money gifts and also things, such as casette players. They helped send the librarians to a convention."

There are 200 members of the Friends of the Library but the group is looking for new members.

Chittim has three ideas for improving the library, in spite of a limited budget.

He said he would like to regionalize the library with other libraries on the South Shore. Tied into this idea is the adoption of computers.

The card catalogue can be computerized, as are card catalogues in other towns.

If a person requests a book which the Paul Pratt Memorial Library does not have, the librarian could find out through the computer what other town or towns have the book.

Now, the librarian has to call each library and that can take a great deal of valuable time, Chittim said.

He said all the library's operations could be performed on the computer. For example, it could keep track of circulation of books and help librarians get a sense of which areas are of great interest.

Some of the surrounding towns are not jumping at the idea to regionalize with Cohasset because it is one of the smallest communities around, Chittim said.

As a result of Proposition 2½, the library, like most municipal departments, Chittim said. "We get the same amount of money (in our budget) every year. Books are increasing in cost 14 percent a year," he said. "What we're interested in, is having people give us some money just because they like the library."

But now the trustees' first priority is to buy more books. "In the reference part of the library we just don't have the number of books we should have," he said.

"We've had to cut a lot of magazine subscriptions. Some people just don't like that," Chittim said.

But the trustees had to find some way to cut back. "There are some libraries that have gone into charging fees for reserving a book," he said. The trustees have no plans in that direction. "The library should be supported by taxpayers."

Which books to buy rests with the library staff. They determine which areas need more strength and which areas are of greatest interest to the public.

Chittim said there are virtaully no restrictions on the type of book purchased, regardless of subject matter and language. "There is very little restraint on that sort of thing. I guess our whole society is so different that we're not about to be censors here in Cohasset.

"My own personal view is that the books are to have good taste. There are some groups who have objected to some books. But there are practically no restrictions," Chittim said.

David Chittim relaxes at Black Rock Beach.

Harbormaster rules deadline

All boat mooring permit holders must display decals on the vessel by July 31. The decals must be on the port side of their boat or the mooring may be subject to removal from the harbor. Owners of unpaid mooring vessels are subject to immediate removal from Cohasset Harbor. The next person on the mooring list will be assigned the space.

Meet the ladies who make the senior luncheons

Four Cohasset women, bound by ties of kinship and friendship, were reminded recently by an 18 year-old newspaper photo, of their long service together at the Senior Citizens luncheons in the Unitarian Parish House.

Ready for service again when the luncheons resume in the Fall, are Doris Gould, Ruth Goodwin, Vivian McCormack and Ruth Pratt.

The recently resurrected 1965 photo of the group at work in the parish house kitchen brought smiles of satisfaction as well as many memories, as they noted how kind time had been to them...not one looks 18 years older today!

The senior citizens lunch program offers weekly meals provided by the school department, served by volunteers from the town's churches. The Gould-Goodwin-McCormack-Pratt foursome has long been a member of the Second Congregational church volunteer group.

The foursome is almost inseparable in both recreation and public service roles. Mrs. Goodwin and Mrs. McCormack are sisters, while Mrs. Goodwin, Mrs. Gould and Mrs. Pratt are well-known in the town for their brisk early morning walks along Pond, South Main, Beechwood and King Streets.

On the right not to know everything

By Lois Martin

Let's make a deal. We all go in the closet and nobody gets to know anyone's sexual preferences. It's a secret, to go no further.

Because honest to gosh, I'm worn out with the responsibility of being let in on the sexual preferences of people, especially strangers. If I don't ask a person's choice in shampoos or radial tires, why in heaven's name would he presume I'm hankering to know about his sex life?

It's tough, actually, to bring this subject forward. It used to be so carefully avoided in conversation if not in implementation. They say that homosexuality has been part of society since time began. And people, being savvy critters, didn't need a proclamation to come to terms with that reality. Because another thing that's been around forever is heterosexuality. Men and women historically have proven finesse in finding one another.

Even a generation ago people who didn't prefer the opposite sex worked to avoid that being the obvious aspect of their personalities, sometimes successfully. Within recent years, there's been a move to declare sexual preference.

Now if that helps them, that's fine. Thing is, it doesn't meet any goals with me. I'm not going to buy groceries at a certain place because of one's sexual preference. I'm not going to exclude or include anyone in business dealings on those terms. And since I won't be likely to be affected by all those preferences, there's really no need for me to be apprised of them. I have never marched in a parade exhorting my sexual inclinations nor have my children. To my knowledge I've never gained a job because of my choice. And I've neither garnered nor lost influence because of my sexual status.

I recognize recent forces which have made necessary acknowledgment of homosexuality. But in most cases all of us know already and regard it as a private affair, none of our bloomin' business. That theory is cast aside only when our young are affected. We don't hold stock in young people being used by older ones for any types of sexual experiences.

Then, last week, as if striking a new blow for anthropology, the Globe ran a piece on the editorial page with the illuminating thesis that homosexuality blooms in the suburbs because that's where the mother/woman is most dominant. OK. That's today. Now tell us about the pre-suburb group that selected the same sex. Bad enough suburban mothers aren't declaring their sexual preferences. Now they're to blame for those who do.

The reasons behind sexual choice must be complex. I lean toward sociological ones more than genetic. And I don't simplistically view it as an error of the Almighty.

There are those who, in declaring, say it's no error at all, simply an alternative lifestyle. Well, it's an option all right, one that's been used a lot, I guess. But so far as I'm concerned it's one that doesn't interest me and is, to be blunt, a waste.

But the only way I'd give a hoot about someone's having made that choice would have been if everyone had. Because that would be a lonely reality.

My point here, though, is that many of us aren't interested in hearing the sexual confessions of people, especially when they're used in what seems to be a misunderstood self-promotion.

We were sitting around the other night, a few of us, discussing some of our former teachers who didn't choose the opposite sex. Kids always know first, incidentally. They've never needed anyone to open a closet door to know what's behind it.

Anyway we were discussing teaching capabilities first, which were impressive, and then our common knowledge, way back then, that they were homosexual. Glad they didn't declare sexual preferences in the mid to late 50s. We wouldn't have known whether we were suppose to conjugate it as a Latin verb or square it for geometry.

The thing is sexual preference won't get you in a history book. About everything's been tried that's available unless they change the human body. Experimentation has worn out invention.

So, it's a deal, right? I won't tell if you won't. To each his own, his privy and his secret. Interested people find out more than enough about each other anyway. Mum's the word, even though the mind knows the score.

I don't believe for a moment, by the by, that suburban mothers determine sexual preferences any more than urban fathers do.

And of one thing I'm certain. I have a right not to know everything.

Jordan Hospital awarded three-year accreditation

The Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Hospital (JCAH) has awarded The Jordan a three-year accreditation. The award is the maximum achievable accreditation available to any facility, undergoing the JCAH review.

The three-member JCAH review team addressed hospital physicians and administrators following the survey of The Jordan last April. JCAH Spokesman Austin Evans commended the group both for running a high quality health care facility and for making significant strides in health care during the past year.

Every member of The Jordan Family can take pride in this important accomplishment.

A Beautiful Approach to Country Living.

You drive in through meadows strewn with seasonal wildflowers. But that's only your entry to the good life at The Meadows, The Green Company's new community of attached single family homes in Hingham. The architectural style is true to the farm-house heritage of the community. The construction and detailing have been accomplished with obvious pride.

The Meadows offers a selection of two and three bedroom homes with unexpected details like master suites with private fireplaced sitting areas, large country kitchens for informal entertaining, separate dining rooms for more formal occasions, hidden corners for quiet contemplation, and a mix of ceiling heights and styles. In addition there are large private courtyards, two-car garages, full basements, a swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. And best of all, this very civilized lifestyle is near major highways to the cultural delights of Boston and vacation areas to the North and South.

Prices range from $157,000 to $210,000 during this, our opening period. Furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street, one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment. When it comes to a good life in the country, The Meadows leads the field!

Chiefs favor dispatcher, oppose Commissioner

John McNabb and Osborne Ingram.

When McGee asked Kealey how he felt about one central public safety chief for both departments Kealey said, "I don't think we'll live to see it. It might work elsewhere. I don't believe it will happen while I'm here - at least I hope not."

Dooley said he had observed the one position of a public safety officer on two visits to Aiken, South Carolina. One visit was conducted before he accepted the position of Cohasset Fire Chief and another was conducted during a family visit there.

Dooley said, "It works well on paper but I see a lot of burnout." (referring to personnel and building burnout). He also said he would regret to see his job as chief abolished.

Kealey said, "You have to get along with selectmen. If you can't you won't stay. Ingram added, "You have to do so in any organization."

Kealey replied the only disagreement he had with selectmen was access to town counsel.

"I think the chief needs access to town counsel without making a written request to the Executive Secretary. Often things come up that I can settle with Richard Henderson (Town Counsel) in five minutes. I'd rather do this than get myself in trouble what with contracts and unions these days. I hope we may be able to straighten this out quickly."

Kealey said the open meeting law presented problems "because you can't get ideas back and forth to each other without it being in the newspaper. You may have to telephone selectmen at home."

Ketcham mentioned with five selectmen "you could have five bosses."

"I believe I do!," Kealey said.

He added, "It is the same with citizens. Many come in with complaints saying, 'I want to see the chief.' They don't want to stop at the desk."

Ingram asked, "What if one selectman says to do something and another says don't do it?"

"I would go to see the Executive Secretary (Mark Lanza) and ask to be put on the agenda," Kealey replied.

Kealey said his department has 17 men and he would like to see the staff increased to 18 men. The detective position which was negotiated into the contract will mean there will be a detective position as of Sept.1.

The detective will be out of uniform, Kealey said.

He added when the detective is appointed the selectmen may appoint one or more civilian dispatchers. The number is up to them, Kealey said.

Kealey said there is a need for the dispatcher to type and monitor the teletype as well as answer the telephone. Selectman and former Police Chief John DeBassio was "frequently strapped to the typewriter," Kealey said.

He added after an arrest the department needs a detailed typewritten report for the court prosecutor by the next morning," Kealey said.

"Sooner or later we will have to have television monitors for the cells and spend some money. So far we've been lucky," he added.

The village merchants are not the only ones asking for more police foot patrol during busy times,Kealey said. There is more activity up at Cushing Plaza and the merchants are requesting more coverage

Kealey said Cohasset officials should look at the Coastal Community Law next year. This law, now used by Hull allows the Police Dept. to hire extra men for the summer. The men are not tied into Civil Service regulations.

"You can lift up the telephone and telll a man 'You're not making it!," Kealey said.

The Music Circus needs an eight hour shift (paid by the Circus) and other citizens are upset because we can't cover their requests for private details, Kealey said. "The men are tired from working two shifts - one at the Cirucs and their regular shift."

Hiring local personnel has advantages and disadvantages too, he said.

"We have to have three men on duty in town at all times by contract. If you have four civilian dispatchers it will cost the town more money. We have a dire need for clerical help because we have no secretary," Kealey said.

When asked his opinion about having the ambulance returned to police Kealey said he did not think most of the police officers have kept up their EMT certification.

Chief Dooley

Dooley said he would like to discuss the interpersonnal relationships between selectmen and himself before discussing the matter with the committee.

"I feel I am moving at a snail's pace but some people feel I am moving too fast," Dooley said.

Dooley is pleased with the relationships with other town departments. He cited the building and health inspectors, the fire prevention officer and himself are combining to make joint inspections of commercial businesses.

Dooley said the "town is too small" to have a Commissioner of Public Safety." In small towns there has to be a lot of interaction with the community - you have to talk and meet with the people. I like to feel both chiefs are doing a good job."

A civilian dispatcher, he said, is a negotiable item under our contract. I might have to give up something I can't live with." He supported the study of a civilian dispatcher for both departments.

"We have to turn the phones over to the Police Dept. now when we have a second alarm. The difficulty is the Police and Fire Depts. do not use the same channels," Dooley said.

In order to call the Fire Dept. at a scene, police have to notifiy a police cruiser if one is present or other surrounding fire departments to relay a message, he added.

Dooley informed the committee he intends to put in "dry hydrants" where there is access to salt water so the water can be used to fight fires "At no cost to the community," Dooley said he expects to get piping through Civil Defense.

Dooley feels hydrants could be used at Government Island, Cunningham and Mill Bridges.

"I'm not afraid to take my hat in hand and ask for help," Dooley said.

He was able to obtain five communication units for $3900 instead of spending $1500 each.

Weathered shingles on old Capes, always built facing south to catch every ray of sun, roses massed on old stone walls that were once the boundaries for the farmer's acres and wild roses sheltered by white sand dunes — these are treasured sights on our South Shore. Summer visitors who travel miles sometimes for a glimpse of a way of life that reaches back to Pilgrim days, also delight in gorging on native lobster, corn, and, if at all lucky, taste treats such as Bob Archer's stuffed guahogs. Bob is a retired pharmacist, having the time of his life, revelling in the out of doors and at a minus tide slogging through the squishy mud flats of Duxbury Bay to dig these huge clams. In typical male fashion, the recipe he shares with us isn't done by the book, as you'll see.

STUFFED QUAHOGS

Grind up quahogs and mix half and half with crushed Ritz crackers. Add, to taste, any or all of the following: Bell seasoning, garlic powder, parsley flakes, celery salt, onion powder, tobasco and Worcestershire Sauce. Mix with a raw egg and place mixture in the empty shell, dotting each one with a "glob" of butter. Bake in 400 degree oven for approximately 20 min. NOTE: With a little luck, you might find some of Bob's quahogs for sale after the Sunday service at the Congregational Church on Ocean St. in Marshfield. Members have a program called "Gardening for God" and sell produce from their gardens and heavenly things such as pies and breads made by churchwomen.

To the west of our beaches ("inland" as the natives say), is the old town of Hanover. Dotted with magnificent antique homes, sometimes dwarfed by barns built larger than the farmer's house and handsome white clapboard, steepled churches, there is a lot of history in this town bordering the North River. Barbara Barker of the Historical Society visited the 92 year-old Bonney twins and we have this recipe for which to thank them. Lucy Josselyn Bonney and Anne Bonney Henderson live in their ancestral home which goes back five generations and when they were girls, used to pick blueberries in the old Washington St. pasture near Fulton Hill. This dessert which their mother, Alice Litchfield Bonney, prepared with the berries they picked, is probably 150 years old and goes like this:

STEAMED BLUEBERRY PUDDING

1 pint (16 oz.) flour
2 tsp. baking powder
1/2 tsp. salt
1 c. milk

Mix until smooth. Add 2 T melted butter and 2 well-beaten eggs and 1/2 c. sugar. Add 2 c. blueberries that have been well-rolled in flour. Steam for two hours in double boiler on top of stove. NOTE: I also have a Thanksgiving Pudding Mrs. Bonney made each year, but I'm going to tuck that away for the holidays.

Almost hidden from sight when you turn onto the Driftway in Greenbush is an old grist mill, which, sad to say, is only operating twice a year now. Katherine Laidlaw, president of the Scituate Historical Society, promises we can buy their stone ground corn meal and see how the grist mill runs during Heritage Days, the weekend of Aug. 13 and 14 and again, Sept. 11, but only in the afternoons from 2 to 4. Scituate is a magical place to be, with fishing and pleasure boats moored in the harbor, lighthouses and quaint old homes, with shops bordering Front St. and restaurants galore. Mrs. Laidlaw is sharing with us a number of recipes featuring their corn meal, but for now, we'll have to be content with this old-fashioned, traditional

INDIAN PUDDING

4 c. milk, boiled in top of double boiler. Stir in:
1/3 c. corn meal; cook for 15 min. Stir in:
3/4 c. molasses and cook 5 min. longer. Remove from heat and stir in:
1/4 c. butter
3 T sugar
1 well-beaten egg
1 tsp. salt
3/4 tsp. cinnamon
1 tsp. ginger, or 1/2 tsp. ginger

Pour batter into a well-greased baking dish. Bake in slow oven at 325 degrees for 1½ to 2 hours. Serve hot with hard sauce, cream, or vanilla ice cream.

* * *

And we just have space enough to squeeze in this recipe for frying fish fillets rolled in stone ground corn meal. Simply dip in milk, roll in corn meal and fry in butter until brown.

Looking back

Mackeral were king

By David Wadsworth
Historical Society Curator

During the 18th and 19th centuries Cohasset's harbor was the scene of Cohasset's principal industry—mackerel fishing.

Summer months saw the town's family-owned fishing schooners put to sea headed for Canadian waters in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and along the shores of the Maritime Provinces.

The Cohasset schooner fleets travelled "Down East" to fill their holds with mackerel, to return home soon if the catch was good or stay away longer if the fish were scarce.

Early Cohasset fishing vessels were called "pinkies," a sort of double-ended schooner having the blunt bows and full lines of the 18th century.

Later, by the mid-1800's, the schooner began to resemble their larger relatives the Clipper ships, having sharp bows, raking masts and streamlined hulls for speed. It always was necessary to return the "catch" to port as soon as possible.

Cohasset families in the mackerel fishing business included those of Capt. John Bates, Capt. Harrison Snow, Capt. Daniel T. Lothrop, Capts. George and Abraham Hall and Capt. Abraham Hobart Tower.

Members of their families, particularly the boys, often crewed on the fishing schooners, and it was not unusual for a Cohasset lad to put to sea by the time he was 9 or 10 years old. Returning from a successful voyage with holds full of the precious mackerel, the big schooners (having names such as "Forest Oak," "Omega," "Albicore" and "Star of Hope") tied up at Cohasset's wharves.

The fish soon would be on their way to market, or perhaps to the fishermen's own dining tables.

Cohasset's fishermen also were farmers and businessmen.

When not at sea, many a "Master Mariner" might be found harvesting his crop of hay, minding the family store, or building a new house for his growing family. Along the shores of Cohasset Harbor, Master Shipbuilders such as Caleb Nichols, Jonathan B. Bates, Bela Bates and William Eddy could be seen in their shipyards, busily constructing some of the new vessels which later would call Cohasset their home port.

At the head of the Cove, Amos Tilden's ironworks turned out the fittings for the new boats, and on Elm Street, ship's carver William Beal hand-carved the intricate decoration that was a part of each sailing vessel.

The 18th and 19th centuries were busy and industrious years for Cohasset as the fishing fleets put to sea and returned. Other Cohasset vessels, larger than the schooners and full-rigged, travelled the ocean trading routes to Euruope and South America, even to the Orient.

Cohasest's Historical Society will recall the town's "Age of Sail" with the second of its 55th anniversary walking tours to Cohasset's historic sites at 3 p.m., Sunday, Aug. 7.

This free guided tour will meet at the Society's Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer St., and enjoy a leisurely walk to Cohasset Harbor. Refreshments will be served, and all are invited to attend.

Historical society receives state grant

The Cohasset Historical Society will receive $536 from the Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities for the conservation of precious watercolors.

The money will be used to support the cleaning, filing and reacidification of two paintings: "The Lothrop Family," a primitive by Sarah Lothrop and "Memorial for Susannah Stoddard," a watercolor painting. Both paintings will be available for public view as soon as these renovations have been completed.

State Sen. Allan McKinnon praised the Arts Council for recognizing the importance of the Historical Society's need to preserve these two paintings of historical art.

Mary Jeanette Murray also said the South Shore Conservatory of Music, Hingham, is another recipient of funding from the Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Murray said, "The Cohasset Historical Society will receive $536 for Historic Conservation and the Conservatory of Music in Hingham will receive $6,000 in Merit Aid. I am very pleased that both the Society and the Conservatory are the beneficiaries of this money because both contribute greatly to the people of the South Shore and my district."

Historic Conservation awards assist cultural institutions in preserving objects of historical significance and managing their collections.

A guide for novice campers on the South Shore

By Patricia Desmond

Let me begin by telling you the type of person I am.

I hate bugs. I am partial to winter vacations in the Carribean and summer vacations anywhere in Europe. I think that life cannot go on if my dishwasher isn't working. I really detest bugs and other creepy crawlies.

So what was I doing bringing a tent to the wilderness with my two children? Coping with fear, that's what.

The three of us arrived at the designated camping area, accompanied by lounge chairs, meant to protect me from sleeping on the hard ground; breakfast for 30, which was our assigned task as part of the expedition from Second Parish Church in Hingham; a bag full of toys, which four year-old Tim only played with for a minute but needed desperately; a propane-fueled lantern that I never did learn how to light; my daughter June's excitement — she's stayed overnight in a piece of canvas with the Junior Fellowship before, and my paronoia, knowing room service would not be provided. I was determined, however, to survive.

The beginning went smoothly.

June helped stack all our belongings in one rather mountainous pile. Tim thought he helped. I read the directions for putting the dome tent together.

Next to us Terry White and his children, Erin and Kevin, put up their tent in the time it took me to read the directions.

Their tent looked magical as it sat up the way it was supposed to. Our tent looked like someone should get a helium wand and blow life into it. I was envious.

"Okay, we'll do their tent next," Terry told his teenagers, saving me from what I guessed would be three or four hours of torture.

Watching Terry do the tent I thought that looks as simple as plugging in the air conditioner. But I know the truth — he's been camping before. I was thankful.

Time passed. I spent two hours lying beside Tim trying to get him to calm down enough to fall asleep. The miracle was he did. It was no miracle that I didn't fall asleep while calming him down — as I usually do at home. I was more apprehensive than my four-year-old about the creeping darkness.

The campsite filled with families, bug spray, lawn chairs and stories of other expeditions into a pioneer past.

The Hallet family arrived late. Their tent was waiting on the ground.

Presto change-o, it assumed cabin-like proportion.

More time passed and the night turned into morning. I was still alive and I had stories about all the sounds I heard in the night. What's more the shampoo and shower I had taken in Deep Woods Off worked. I only had two bug bites.

The plan was that we would now spend two long days, canoeing 22 miles. The task seemed formidable to someone who has never been alone in a sailboat — me.

Jane and Win Hallett pulled their shiny canoe from the top of their car. Magicians usually use hats. Their three year-old, Ben, and eight year-old Julie followed close.

The Halletts made that cumbersome 17-foot canoe seem like something an ordinary person could handle. But I knew better. At the bank of the river others in the group helped slip the thing into the "put out." (Put out means a designated place where canoes can easily and safely enter the river - but doesn't it sound Freudian?

Several people gave me instructions on how to row. The most useful piece of knowledge was that I could use the paddle like a sailboat's rudder to change directions if the regular stoke methods failed.

What I really wanted to know was how Jane Hallett kept her hair looking good despite the forces of nature.

The Halletts' canoe was already across the river before I noticed. I had wanted to study the right way to get there before it was my turn but I blew it, being distracted by Eric and Nancy Hansberry's collapsible kayaks. They assembled in the time it took me to remember where I left my will. Their two children, Lynn and Mark, sailed off alone in one.

I tightened the life preserver around Tim.

Beth Hallett and Rachel Schreier, both 12, stepped into a yellow rental canoe and moved off. That should have been reassuring.

Others - who also seemed like normal people — followed the same procedure. First the canoe went into the water, then the people stepped in, then they paddled across the river to wait for the laggers.

Why did it seem simple?

Joe Dupuis, the group leader, said 'Come on.' He was talking to me. His wife, Susan, said something that was probably reassuring if only I could hear anything over the voice of fear.

I stepped into the canoe anyway, with June and Tim.

I'd tell you more but my space is up for this story.

Let me just add: everyone lived, even me. And we all paddled the 22 mile course.

Child bearing program grants

Plymouth Community Nurse Association recently received several grants totalling over $70,000 for its Early Child Bearing program.

ECB helps young women and their families cope with the stresses of pregnancy. The program which has an annual budget of $90,000 serves about 100 girls each year in 10 towns from Hanover to Plymouth.

The Department of Social Services renewed a partnership grant for nearly $22,000. The state agency first made the award in 1980 with the Plymouth Board of Health serving as a co-partner for costs related to serving Plymouth residents. The Old Colony United Way joined the partnership in 1982.

Marie Caristi, president; Doris McNulty, vice-president; Debbie Cook, secretary; Carol Martin, treasurer; and Laura Atherton, Janine Broadhurst, Mary Larson and Eleanor Thistlethwaite, director.

The League also voted to adopt two studies for the 1983-84 year. The first study will be an examination of local town government structure, including analyzing regionalization of services and town meeting procedure.

This study will be chaired by Chartis Langmaid.

National security will be the second study — examining military policy objectives, defense spending and the national security making process.

This study, in its second year, will again be coordinated by Sherry Becker, and is part of a national league effort to arrive at a consensus on military policies.

DeBassio to mediate Fire Department feud

By Mike Berger

Former Police Chief and Selectman John DeBassio will be the calming force between Fire Chief Martin Dooley and some firefighters opposed Dooley's management practices.

DeBassio met with Dooley two weeks ago and met with some firefighters Friday.

He volunteered to meet with both sides in an attempt to "improve the atmosphere" in the department.

"I've talked with the chief and with some members of the department. I will report back my impressions and the best recourse and avenues to improve the atmosphere there," said DeBassio.

Meanwhile, Acting Fire Capt. Dick Conley attended last week's selectmen's meeting and expressed his anger at selectmen for Dooley's interview with a newspaper last week.

Dooley said the public should know what he is up against as he tries to supervise the department.

He said the problems of the department go back to the firefighters union support for Capt. Roger Lincoln and the reluctance by many firefighters to support an out-of-town fire chief.

Dooley wants a full set of rules and regulations enforced although the union is challenging his decision with the state Labor Relations Board.

In an interview Dooley, without mentioning names said the problems with his men focus on four to six men including an acting officer and a captain.

Conley told selectmen, "Twenty-three years I've worked for you and I've always prided myself on the fact that problems can be worked out in-house."

"We agreed when we came before you (in executive session) that we won't get into a newspaper war."

Referring to the Mariner article, Conley said, "Only one sentence is the truth - 'The men have a total dedication to the operations of this department and the total welfare of its citizens.'

"I speak for myself, my name, reputation and least importantly my political reputation has been damaged."

Conley added, "I want Lanza and Dooley here in front of the board to have all arguments out, right here... I don't like to do business through the newspaper but as far as I can see the only recourse I have could be at the next regularly scheduled selectmen's meeting.

Selectman Cliff Mitman said, "The chief is in charge to make sure this kind of thing does not happen again." He then asked Conley, "What charges are you speaking of against Dooley?"

Conley said, "We only have one acting officer so it is no doubt in anyone's mine who he is talking about. If he doesn't have any problems, fine, he can retract the Selectmen will decide Laugelle's fate by next Wed.

By Patricia Anne Walsh

By Aug. 10 residents should know the fate of Landfill Supervisor Joe "Skinny Laugelle."

Selectmen plan to issue a decision regarding an appeal hearing within 10 days.

Laugelle had an open hearing with selectmen last week and about 250 residents attended and clapped loudly when Laugelle was praised by witnesses.

These residents took issue with the Board of Health's decision to terminate Laugelle.

Under the new town meeting personnel bylaw Laugelle's hearing set a precedent for an open hearing.

Not one resident attended to testify against Laugelle except health board members, Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulous and board engineer Fred DeFeo.

Laugelle's attorney Charles Humphreys presented a petition signed by 1,100 town residents, all in support of Laugelle.

For weeks the town political hot spot, "Log 'n Line" buzzed with comments about Laugell's helpfulness. "He has helped my young daughter and wife unload heavy trash," was one comment.

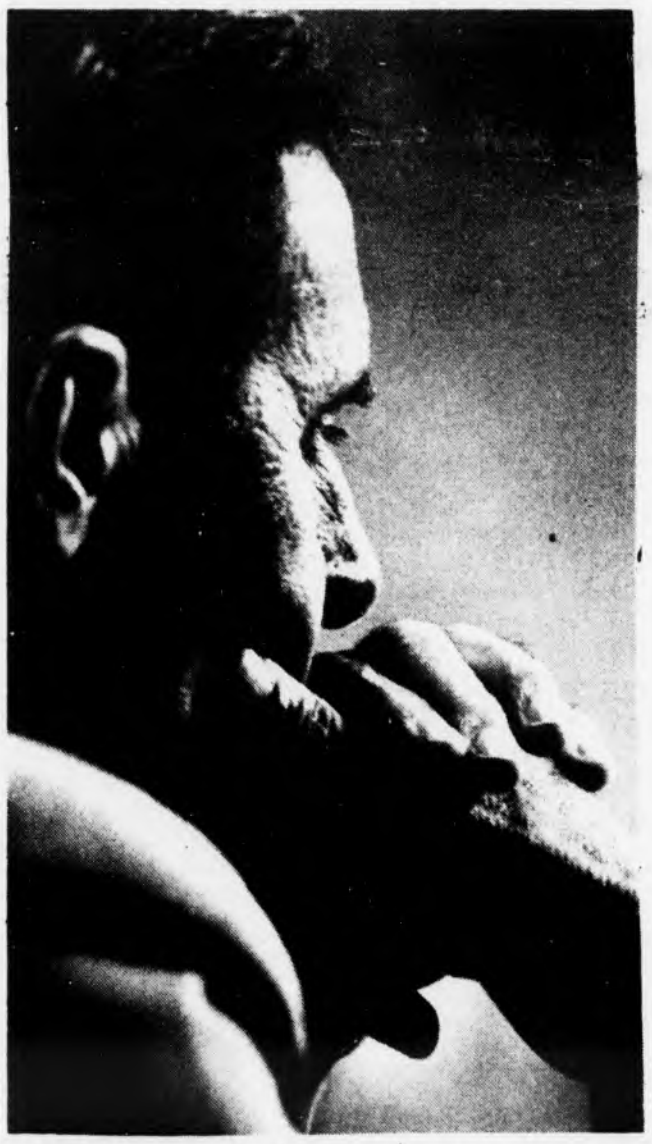
"When we had to drive down around the side toward the rear and my car became stuck in the mud and ice, he managed to get it out without my having to hire a wrecker," was another comment.

"For $15,000 to $16,000 what do they expect the man to do? Considering the high winds at the landfill site which scatter rubbish everywhere, he does as well as can be expected in a difficult, dirty job" was another comment.

Health board member Dr. Michael Bliss read a long list of citations from the state, beginning with 1972, for not adhering to the regulations.

Humphreys objected because he said the actual management of the landfill by the health board did not begin until July of 1981.

Bliss repeatedly cited state citations such as litter, covering material with too much sand, insufficient compaction of refuse and depth of daily cover.



Testifying for Laugelle were Engineer John O'Toole, Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield, Richard Silvia, Peter O'Loughlin, James Tyeryar, Harbormaster Harry Ritter, Engineer Neil Murphy, Water Commission Chairman and Engineer William Montouri, Janet Figueiredo and Owen O'Malley.

Montouri, a member of the health board during the early 1970s, said at that time the board had difficulty getting money from the Advisory Committee.

One man was paid to supervise the dump and the health board had insufficient funds for equipment and cover material. This, he said, caused the state to cite the Cohasset landfill.

Tyeryar said the town landfill could be better operated with a rubber tired tractor, a four-way bucket and

Special town meeting Sept. 19

Selectmen have called for a special town meeting for Tuesday, Sept. 19 at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset High School, essentially to pay $50,000 in outstanding bills.

Town Accountant Bill Signorelli has finished his financial reports for Fiscal Year 1982-83 and also received state aid figures and assessments for Fiscal Year 1983-84.

The town received $123,897 more in state aid compared to a year ago but after subtracting county and state assessments, Signorelli figures the town has $79,863 in additional funds to spend.

However, Signorelli has found the town must spend about $50,000 to begin FY 1984 with a clean balance.

Fiscal years begin July 1.

Signorelli said in June he has never seen such a substantial budget deficit at the end of the fiscal year.

"Not in my 15 years as town accountant have I seen so many unpaid bills faced at the end of the year. The amount of unpaid bills appears will be about $35,000 or $40,000. We generally see about $1,000 or $2,000 in unpaid bills at the end of the fiscal year," he said.

Some of the overdue bills are: greater than expected overtime amounts in the Fire Dept. because of unfilled vacancies; a shortfall in the federal revenue sharing funds; an increase in the town's legal costs and because of cost overruns at the town sanitary landfill.

It takes a nine-tenths vote of town meeting to appropriate money to pay the bills.

Selectmen will open the warrant soon.

Salvador to build low income housing

Selectmen, the Planning Board and Housing Authority no sooner approved the low income housing plan required by the state last week, when land owner Bernard Salvador acknowledged he is planning to build low income housing on 22 acres he owns on Route 3A.

Salvador said he is joining with architect Maxwell Pounder, former Sewer Commissioner, on developing the project.

"I expect it will take one or two years to get the permits, including building a package sewer treatment plant which may discharge into Bound Brook," Salvador said.

The land borders Cohasset and Scituate.

Salvador said he planned to erect the housing units on the Cohasset portion, leaving the Scituate property as "open land." Scituate has plenty of low income housing, Salvador said, since the Kent Village 64-unit housing project opened.

The site is adjacent to Prentiss Brown Chevrolet, and a short distance from the Stop and Shop and Cushing Plaza, as well as bus transportation to Boston at North Scituate, Salvador added.

He expects many of the subsidized tenants may come from area towns rather than from Boston.

"I will have to keep the units a number of years under the regulations," said Salvador, referring to retaining ownership for 16 years. Builders of condominiums sell

Cohasset's week . . .

Kealy story clarifications

Last week the Mariner reported Police Chief Joseph Kealey saying the Music Circus needs an eight hour police detail shift. Kealey said this week the Music Circus requests 55 details a week on an average with four men working four hours every nightly detail. Kealey also said if selectmen choose to appoint another officer to give Kealey an 18-member force, the police contract allows them to add a civilian dispatcher. In a related matter, Kealey has appointed Officer Brian Cogill as the department's new detective. The appointment was effective July 1.

Water company hike

The Hingham Water Company has applied for another rate increase which would raise water bills for some Cohasset residents an estimated 16.5 percent. The increase, if granted by the state Dept. of Public Utilities, until June of 1984. The company supplies water to nearly 10,400 customers in Hingham, Hull, North Cohasset and a small section of Norwell. The company cited increasing operating expenses and a need to keep earnings as high as possible to attract investors for a proposed water treatment plant. The proposed rate increase would raise each customer's quarterly bill by about $7.50, providng the company with an additional $373,000 in annual revenue.

Housing agreement

Selectmen unanimously voted to sign the low income housing agreement. The Housing Authority and the Planning Board signed the pact at the Housing Authority Meeting on July 25.

Storm drainage

Thirty-three residents signed a request for the installation of storm drainage on lower Ledgewood Drive. The residents want to "alleviate a hazardous situation that exists during the winter season when ice forms make driving and walking treacherous."

Selectmen said that Ledgewood residents should petition a warrant article in September rather than to petition the selectmen.

Patrol officer appointments

Three candidates, John Conte of Cohasset, Gerald Rautenberg of Hyde Park and John Suter of Hull, must accept patrolmen appointments by Aug. 10. August appointments will be confirmed by selectmen at a future selectmen's meeting.

Town counsel

Selectmen approved Selectman John DeBassio's request to adopt the rules and regulations for procedure to the town counsel as an amendment.

New sanitary codes

The Board of Health is alerting all real estate brokers and owners of rental properties that the State Community Sanitation Division has new state sanitary code regulations, "Minimum Standards of Fitness for Human Habitation."

Rental property owners are urged to come to the health board office to review these new regulations, which are effective Sept. 1.

The new asbestos regulation becomes effective Jan. 1, 1984.

Board members needed

The Board of Health recently appointed a Hazardous Materials Committee to prepare a plan of response to spillage of dangerous substances, attend workshops and compile an inventory of hazardous materials in town and other activities regarded relevant to hazardous waste management.

The Committee has been active in planning educational seminars regarding the ever-increasing problems associated with the disposal of hazardous materials.

The board needs two new members who have time, interest and energy to help plan the activities of the committee.

Interested persons should send a brief statement of interest to the Board of Health Office, 43 Elm St.

Studds meeting

U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds will be in Marshfield at the Furnace Brook School to meet with constituents from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Aug. 17.

The House of Repreentatives will be in summer recess from Aug. 6 to Sept. 12. During that interim, before the Aug. 17 meeting, the Mariner will interview him.

Residents who will be unable to attend the Aug. 17 session are invited to forward questions of importance to this District (10) that will be addressed as part of the interview.

Grievance honored

Selectmen voted to honor the grievances of firefighter Robert Silvia and pay him for overtime spent while attending Emergency Medical Technician training. Other Cohasset firefighters have received payment for attending E.M.T. training. State law requires two E.M.T. certified people to accompany an ambulance to a hospital.

Attention Singles

Single men and women on the South Shore are being interviewed for the Mariner's October supplement "Single on the South Shore."

The Mariner intends to provide an informed, interesting, entertaining publication, the first of its kind, about the single style.

And that style is mightily varied. Research is underway. The Mariner will meet with singles (25 years old and up) at Bridgwaye Inn, Humarock, Thursday, Aug. 11 from 8 to 10 p.m.

We're combining our business with pleasure. We will invite those attending to participate in the supplement in a variety of ways.

We need to talk with people who used to be married, those who never did, those who are raising children, those who are uplifting only themselves.

And make no mistake, we're looking for nifty people, the kinds who have carved a creative and intriguing niche in the world, with the South Shore as home base.

For more information on this supplement, on the evening at Bridgwaye, on participating or suggesting, call Lois Martin, executive editor, at the Mariner, 837-5625 or 383-6731.

There have been numerous responses to the Aug. 11 gathering from both men and women.

a dump truck to dump the cover material more efficiently.

Tyeryar started a private landfill on Route 3A and later sold it to Barry Brothers, doing business as Cohasset Heights LTD for over $2 million.

Murphy, who supervises the Hingham public landfill, suggested more manpower and the use of cover material with less clay and more sand during the winter months when cover with a lot of clay is difficult to work with.

The health board objected to Laugelle accepting material without enough clay. The supplier of the landfill cover material said it is difficult to judge the difference between cover material which contains a 25 percent clay composition versus a 35 percent clay composition without a visual inspection. The supplier said such testing equipment would cost about $500.

DeFeo said Laugelle should be able to tell the difference if material has too much sand by visual inspection. He said the workers operating the landfill are capable of doing a good job as in the past few weeks, "when they put their minds to it."

DeFeo said the road to the landfill was flooded with water for two weeks this spring, an unusual time period. Laugelle testified it was flooded for several more weeks.

Health Board Chairman Marilyn Sweeney said $240,000 was spent on the landfill in recent months.

Others testified more than $300,000 was spent in recent years. Sweeney said it seemed Laugelle said he would do things, he would try, yet they were simply not done.

DeFeo added Laugelle has enough equipment and manpower - one other man - to do his job.

Laugelle is expected to check cars for stickers, clean up litter, check the content of cover material, move dumpsters and spread cover material.

Selectman Cliff Mitman, former Personnel Board chairman, said the personnel board decided under a previously filed grievance that Laugelle need not be a "working foreman" but he is to see the job is done.

Selectman Frank England repeatedly asked Bliss regarding what help the board had given to Laugelle. Bliss said he is not an expert on landfill operations but he relies on the advise of experts.

Litchfield, who previously had supervised Laugelle, said no one with the manpower, equipment and harassment Laugelle has received could possibly have done a better job.

After negotiations, Ma Bell to rebate

A blanket rate rebate granted by New England Telephone Co. for the three-day loss of service to Cohasset, was not an act of blind generosity by the utility company, according to resident Peter Pratt.

He contends that although the automatic rebate to 2000 residents is justifiable and proper, it took a lot of negotiations to bend the phone company far enough to take that stance.

"They were definitely pushed into this by the attorneys in Attorney General Frank Bellotti's office," he says. "I talked with the attorneys in that office for many hours and we came to this conclusion and they pushed for it. Without the proding of the AG's office, this wouldn't have come about."

Pratt, a consultant for the cable television industry, urged selectmen to demand rate rebates for the 2000 residents, municipal services and businesses which lost telephone service for one to three days. Although selectmen agreed to write a letter in late June requesting that citizens be rebated, they later disagreed with Pratt's demand for an automatic blanket rebate. Selectmen abided by the New England Telephone's decision to rebate only those customers who notified the company about loss of service on June 20.

But after continued talks with the attorney general's office, and long negotiations, Pratt says the telephone company was urged to make the automatic rebate available to Cohasset residents and businesses.

The phone loss was caused when a road crew severed an underground phone cable beneath Route 3A on June 20. More than two-thirds of the town was without phone service from one to three days

Customers will now pay for 27, rather than 30 days of telephone service in June. The discounts will appear in July's billing. Savings will depend on what type of service and equipment the consumer has.

As of a week ago, only 700 of the approximately 2000 residents affected by the outage had reported the loss of service to the telephone company, Pratt says. That was only one-third the total number of residents, he says, which experienced the outage. Therefore, the utility company had not rebated an estimated $3000 in services not rendered during that three-day period.

If that total number of rebates had not exceeded 60 percent, Pratt intended to seek legal counsel at the attorney general's office.

"Not everyone would have taken the time out of their busy schedules to call the phone company about the loss of service," according to Pratt. "It's a hassle. And the attorney general agreed. That was why pressure was put on the phone company to automatically rebate the rates to the Cohasset consumers."

Pratt says he is satisfied with the blanket rebate, while acknowledging New England Telephone did not acquiese to his requests "because they are a bunch of swell guys. They did it because two assistant attorney generals from the AG's office verbally negotiated with them."

It is his belief, that without the automatic rebate, "the phone company would have profited by several thousand dollars off the loss of service of Cohasset residents. They would have profited from our loss,"he says.

Pratt agrees this is a complicated issue for residents and town officials to pursue, but in an "era of deregulation, selectmen must be able to address such issues in the future," he adds.

Hazardous waste of town departments to be inventoried

The Hazardous Waste Materials Committee is drafting a questionnaire which will be sent to all town departments to obtain an inventory of all hazardous wastes generated by the departments.

Committee Chairman Jeff Bettinger, a chemist, has been speaking before all the town boards explaining the committee's purposes.

Bettinger says they decided to inventory the town first "to get out own house in order," before investigating commercial busineses.

Civil Defense Director, Fred Johassen, a member of the committee, stressed the town should be prepared to spend money on hazardous waste removal. He said costs may range up to over $600 per barrel.

Health Agent, Elaine Eliopoulos, said the Hazardous Waste Committee was initiated as a committee which reports to the Board of Health.

Eliopoulos said it is best to have the mechanisms for dealing with disposal, "before a bad spill occurs."

Materials which are a fire hazard, corrosive, chemically reactive, or poisonous are classified as hazardous waste. Included are bleach, motor oil, toilet bowl cleaner, car wax, solder and gasoline.

The Hazardous Waste Commission has already been asked to investigate any possible detrimental effects of the ingredients of sludge. Since members of the committee, such as engineer William Baird, have a lot of expertise and access to scientific reports, Bettinger assured Sewer Commission Chairman, Charlie DeSantis.

The Committee has the capability to obtain information from r ;any sources.

statement."

He added the firefighters were to attend Friday's meeting with DeBassio and also said, "Today's paper (July 27) was a personal attack that will not be tolerated."

Selectmen also discussed the responsibility and accountability of the police and fire chiefs. DeBassio said, "Under the job summary, the Executive Secretary should supervise all jurisdiction of the board which excludes personnel below the chief. The chief will be accountable and responsible to the executive secretary on a basis of a day to day supervision."

DeBassio asked, "Do operations departments report to the executive secretary or through us?"

After further inconclusive discussion Selectman Chairman Mary Jane McArthur agreed DeBassio and Selectman Frank England would look into the original job description of the executive secretary.

In related matters Executive Secretary Mark Lanza repeated his support for Dooley and his agreement with him to enforce rules and regulations in the department.

Lanza said there are mandatory matters to negotiate with the union such as wages, hours, fringe benefits, standards of productivity and conditions of employment.

Regarding rules and regulations Lanza said, "I believe the state Labor Commission will say rules or regulations linked to areas of past practices must have to be bargained."

The last set of Fire Dept rules found by Dooley date back to 1956. The firefighters union has filed an unfair labor charge or prohibitive practice against Dooley.

The charge concerns the practiceof using rules and regulations adapted in 1956 rather than the practice of using the negotiated contract as the final rules and regulations.

Union President William Protulis said the union feels the chief should use the contract as a standard for enforcing rules and regulations.

Dooley said this week his call for an enforcement of regulations and higher productivity among the men has received a 99 percent backing from town residents who responded to the newspaper story with praise for Dooley through office and home telephone calls.

School attendance policy workshop

By Theresa Sullivan

The School Committee, with input from parents and teachers, revised its second draft on attendance policies last week.

Under this preliminary policy, students will be allowed an unlimited number of absences due to illness, provided the illness is verified by either a doctor's note or telephone call, or a visit by the parent or guardian to the school.

Other excused absences will be school-related field trips and up to five "parental discretion" days per term.

A school-related function must be approved by the administration to be considered "excused."

Each student is allowed five parental discretion days per term and 10 per school year.

For example, a parent may decide to keep his child out of school to go on a vacation or to visit a college. The parent must notify the school at least one day prior to the day missed.

"We don't want that to turn into five each term, just like clockwork," Diana Kornet, school committee member said.

If a child misses school for an unexcused absence, he is entitled to two or more days to make up work missed. Make-up work should be arranged by the student with his teachers.

Unexcused absences are all absences without proper approvals.

Parental discretion days in excess of five per term and 10 per year count as unexcused absences.

A student will be given a zero for every unexcused absence and will not be allowed to make up the class work missed.

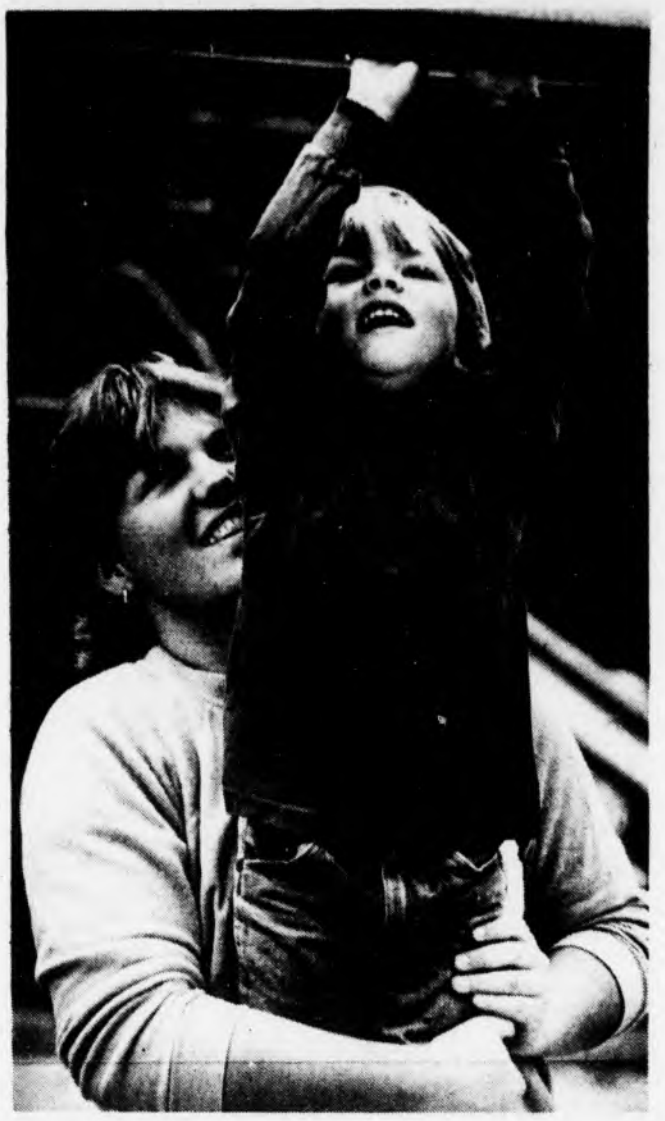
Written work due on a day in which the student had an excused absence may be passed in but will be marked late and marked down.

English teacher Ron Emmons said he doesn't want to see parents and students taking advantage of the discretionary days, just because the days are permitted. "I think we have to keep in mind there are 45 days in a term. It does matter being in class. We don't think people should be taking their children out of school to go away."

If a day of school is missed for an excused or unexcused reason, with the exception of field trips, no student may participate in or attend after school activities that day.

Tardiness

Tardiness to school will be excused if there is a bus delay, a power failure or if the student has "very occasional car trouble," according to the draft.



Any other form of tardiness will be considered unexcused. Any class missed will be considered cut and the student will face the same penalties as the student who had an unexcused absence from school.

No student who has cut one or more classes may attend or participate in after school functions and activities.

A student may be excused from school for an early dismissal if he presents a written request from his parent or guardian to the attendance clerk or homeroom teacher after arrival to school.

The note should include the name, date, time to be excused, destination, reason for leaving, means of travel and telephone number for confirmation.

High school administrators plan to hold an assembly at the beginning of the school year to explain the revised attendance policy.

☐William S. Hoopes of Cohasset, a student at the Rhode Island School of Design, was awarded a $250 Second Prize for an exercise station in the seventh annual American Plywood Association "Popular Science" magazine Plywood Project Contest.

Hoopes single sheet design won him the prize on the merits of his efficient and appropriate use of APA trademarked plywood.

Awards included a $1,000 First Prize, a $250 Second Prize, and Honorable Mentions, each of which received a set of "Popular Science" How-To Books. There were three contest categories: half sheet, single sheet and one and one-half to six sheets.

The contest attracted more than 200 entries from throughout the United States, Canada and overseas.

Plans for the exercise station and other prize-winning projects, to be announced in the August 1983 "Popular Science," are available for $2 each from the American Plywood Association, P.O. Box 11700, Tacoma, Washington 98411.

☐Douglas M. Johnston of Cohasset was appointed general sales manager of WQTV (Channel 68), Boston.

Johnston, who lives on Rice Island, off Jerusalem Road, with his wife and two children, has 17 years of broadcast sales experience. Recently he was general sales manager for WXNE TV (Channel 25).

WQTV now broadcasts FNN (Financial News Network) continuously each day from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. A new expanded format, which Johnston calls "counter-programming at its best," will include evening and prime-time hours and establish WQTV as a full-time independent station in the area.

"Barnaby Jones," "Kojak," Wild Kingdom," and "Tic-Tac-Dough" are part of WQTV's fall lineup.

Johnston's major responsibility will be to the national market.

Johnston has had management positions with Continental National Sales, Columbia Pictures Television, RTVR Chicago and KPLR-TV in St. Louis.

To strengthen WQTV's signal, a new 46-foot antenna is scheduled to be erected atop the Prudential Building by helicopter late in August. "Most people will experience a doubling of power," said Chief Engineer Bob Colford, who will supervise the complicated installation event.

This makes Channel 68 the fourth full-power independent station in the Boston area, when it transmits its call letters Sept. 5.

"Boston's a healthy and growing market, with a definite need for another station," said Johnston. "By introducing a format of alternative programming, we answer a public need."

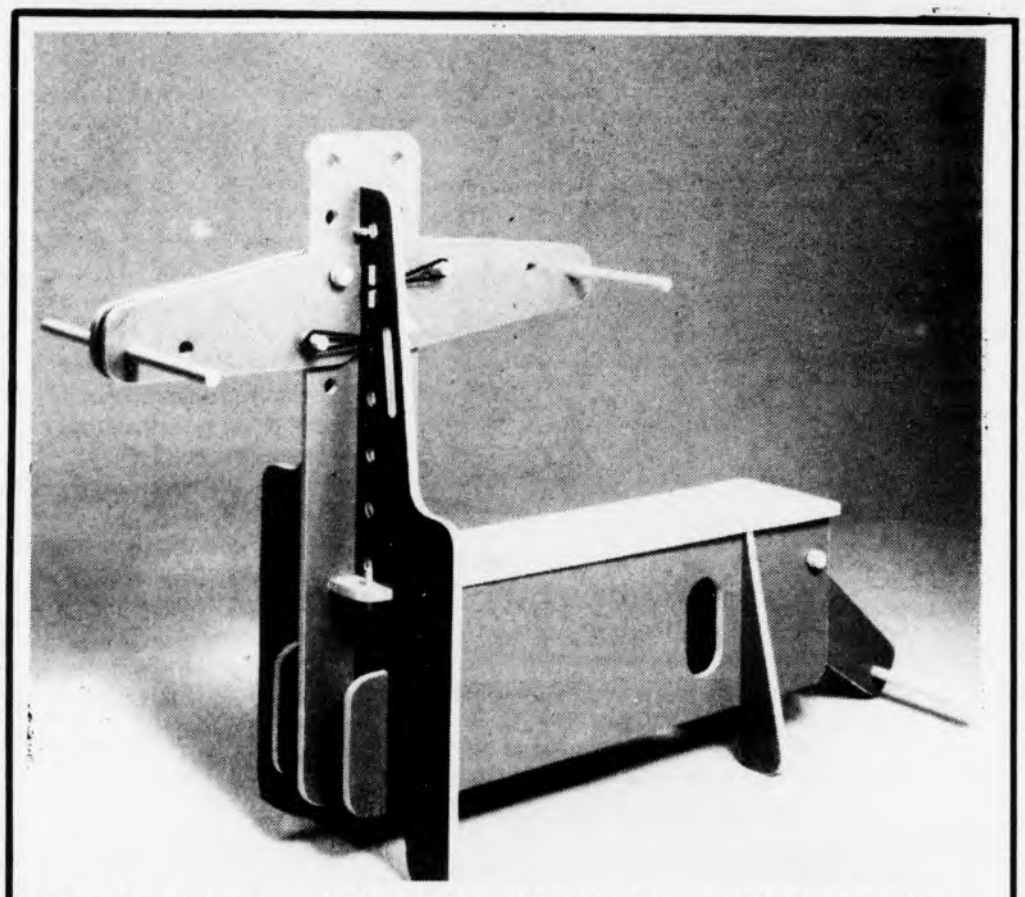
☐Boy Scout Troop No. 28 is in Manomet for two weeks, under the leadership of Merle Brown and Arthur Lehr...there are two men who certainly deserve a lot of credit. They are always busy doing for the Scouts.

☐Kate Barrett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Barrett, is visiting her aunt in California. Kate made the trip "solo" and will be gone for five weeks. She is having a ball! And her Aunt Ann is delighted to have her. Meanwhile, Kate's Mom is never idle! She is entertaining a house guest from France, under the A.F.S. program. Brings to mind the old saying, "Ask a busy person..."



☐Speaking of trips, Bon Voyage to Mary Jane McArthur, who is off to Europe on a trip with her daughter.

☐The Cohasset Historical Society will sponsor its second walking tour of historic Cohasset Sunday, Aug. 7 at 3 p.m. Walk from the Lothrop House to "Ship Cove" at the town's harbor. Old buildings, wharves, shipyards and the 18th century Minot's Lighthouse will be described. This is a good way to entertain as well as inform any house guests that you may have!

☐Caroline Arbury hasd a brand new birthday bike and it is a beauty. Watch for her "sitting tall in the saddle," a real nice sight to see.

☐Mike O'Connell sure was the "talk of the town" last week. He really worked hard for the Normand Leveille Classic, raising a lot of money to help his fellow teammate in his time of need. Area residents went to Pembroke to catch a glimpse of their favorite celebrity, and most donated to Normand's fund. The fact that he was able to get Leveille here was a real plus, showing everyone just how much progress he has made.

☐Cohasset is to have its very own television celebrity very soon. Penelope Dane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Dane, is on her way to Hollywood to appear with Bill Cullen on the popular T.V. show, Child's Play, seen every day on Channel 7 at 10:30 a.m. The kids try to describe "adult" words to the best of their ability, and it is humorous to say the least. More details about Penelope's T.V. appearance will be released soon.

☐Dr. and Mrs. Edward Woods donated a Liriodendron tree to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library in memory of Evelyn Wood, assistant librarian for 32 years. The gift is from their four children, Bill, Anne, Susan and Jonathan, whose mother wrote that Evelyn was responsible for making them "avid readers."

☐Nancy Anderson has a houseful of company. Her daughter, Jean, is here from Wyoming with her four children, and husband Joe. The entourage includes Nancy's newest granddaughter, making her Cohasset debut. When the Hagans come to Cohasset, they manage to include seeing all family members, as Joe's mom, Elizabeth, lives in town also.

☐Another visitor in Cohasset is Joan Edmonds. Joan certainly came here the long way, via Texas (where she helped her sister set up her new house with Dad, Bruce). Joan and her husband Paul are enjoying their stay in Cohasset...another family with both sets of parents living in the same town.

☐The Bartow's have been enjoying a lively visit from Steve's niece, Carroll Forbes, from Broughty Ferry, Scotland. She arrived July 24 for a two-week stay. Carroll is a student at the Gordonston School entering the fifth form (equivalent to 10th grade) and plays many sports, including tennis, soccer, racquet ball, basketball, field hockey and volleyball.

She's seen "Boston," Plimouth Plantation, 3-D movies, Paragon Park, swum the Atlantic, gone on the waterslide, went to a Red Sox game, and will visit Cape Cod and Wareham before returning home Sunday.

Septage agreement unsatisfactory

The Board of Health and the Water Commission are still not satisfied with a septage agreement with Hull.

Cohasset Board of Health members still have not signed an agreement with Hull to take Cohasset's septage, in return for Cohasset taking Hull's sludge at the Cedar Street Dump.

Cohasset Health Board members Barbara Kern and Helath Agent Elaine Eliopoulos went to the Hull Permanent Sewer Commission meeting July 27 last week.

Eliopoulos said that a recent meeting, the health board had some questions regarding provisions in the new agreement redrafted by Hull Town Counsel James Lampke, and sent to Cohasset by Hull Sewer Plant Director, Jill Tolefson.

The Cohasset Water Commissioners have unanimously voted to object to the Hull inclusion which says: "The (Cohasset Health) Board agrees that it will not object to the commission depositing sludge in any private landfill in Cohasset except based upon acceptable scientific objective criteria or applicable law. This provision shall survive the termination or expiration of this agreement."

The water commissioners wrote to Eliopoulos:

"The only presently sited 'private landfill' in Cohasset is currently the subject of litigation to which this Commission is a party." The Commissioners are apparently referring to Barry Bros.' Cohasset Heights Ltd. Landfill off Route 3A at the junction of King Street.

"The only presently sited "private landfill in Cohasset", in our judgement, is within the Town of Cohasset's declared public water supply. This Commission, holding such public water supplies in a fiduciary trust for the citizens of Cohasset, and empowered by applicable sections of Chapter III of the General Laws to protect our declared public water supplies, has no choice but to strongly object to Article 6 of the proposed agreement.

"The statement that 'This provision shall survive the termination of expiration of this agreement' could be construed as extending to the Hull Commission an unlimited grant of authority to dump sludge materials in Cohasset landfills."

Kern questioned Hull's charging $22.50 a load for septage hauled from Cohasset, against the $15 charged for Hull septage. She was told the icnrease in inexpensive considering Hull is charging Norwell $30 per load and the Sewer Commission udnerstands Worcester is paying $45 per load.

Kern asked why Cohasset should pay for all testing fo the sludge to be dumped in Cohasset's town dump.

Sewer plant manager Edward Kendrick said Hull, under this agreement, would exempt Cohasset from charges to dump up to four truckloads of sludge from the Elm St. Sewer Plant, and the exemption is worth about $400 per month.

Donald Gillis, Hull health board member said he attended the meeting because residents complained to him regarding the increasing traffic caused by haulers going to the Hull sewer plant.

John Kelly, Hull sewer member said, "I think that is a concern we should listen to."

Kendrick said Cohasset and Norwell were sending emergency trips to Hull, from homes or commercial establishments where there were overflow or backup problems (rather than routine maintenance pumping).

Transportation madness

We of the South Shore have long used expletives but we are ill-advised to use superlatives in describing transportation madness. Who among us can truly say what's the worst traffic jam we've ever known?

But as everyone this side of the Department of Public Works seems to appreciate, the 65 million dollar reconstruction of the Southeast Expressway between 1984 and 1986 promises to be the one: the biggest, most boondoggliest, most ulcer-producing traffic jam in regional transportation history.

For F. Lee Bailey and others who commute in helicopters, here are a few low points:

...The present plan is to rebuild the road, the bridges, the median strip, the drainage ditches and the access roads on Route 3 between Route 128 in Braintree and Massachusetts Ave. in Boston. The first, historic question that comes to mind is why bridges with "1954" chiseled into them like so many navels need to be rebuilt in 1984.

The answer is that in 1954, as today, public works projects apparently were built primarily in order to get rebuilt by the shoddy contractors who built them.

...The "plan" is to give the driving commuter the same insufficient distressway in 1986 that he has today, after spending $65 million and after driving drivers nuts for three years. The rebuilt expressway will not accommodate more cars, it will not be better designed, and it will not include reversible lanes.

...Worst of all, for those who must commute to Boston during the next three years, nearly no thought has been given to alleviating the colossal traffic jam that must be created every day between Braintree and Boston during construction.

The M.B.T.A., its present fleet of Red Line cars loaded to the gunwales, isn't ready. The Plymouth & Brockton, jealous of its privileged franchise and unwilling to cooperate with the M.B.T.A., isn't ready. Nor are there any plans to manage Routes 3A, 53 and 28 in such a way as to accommodate major commuter traffic on a temporary basis.

About all that seems to have been planned is to set aside two lanes of traffic on the Expressway — inbound in the morning and outbound in the evening — along the eight and one-half miles of construction between Braintree and Boston. In the jargon, these lanes will be "tunnels," meaning there will be no entrance or egress except at either end of the "tunnel."

To us this plan sounds like a certified mess until the first four car fender-bender, at which time it sounds like heretofore unprecedented Hell-on-wheels.

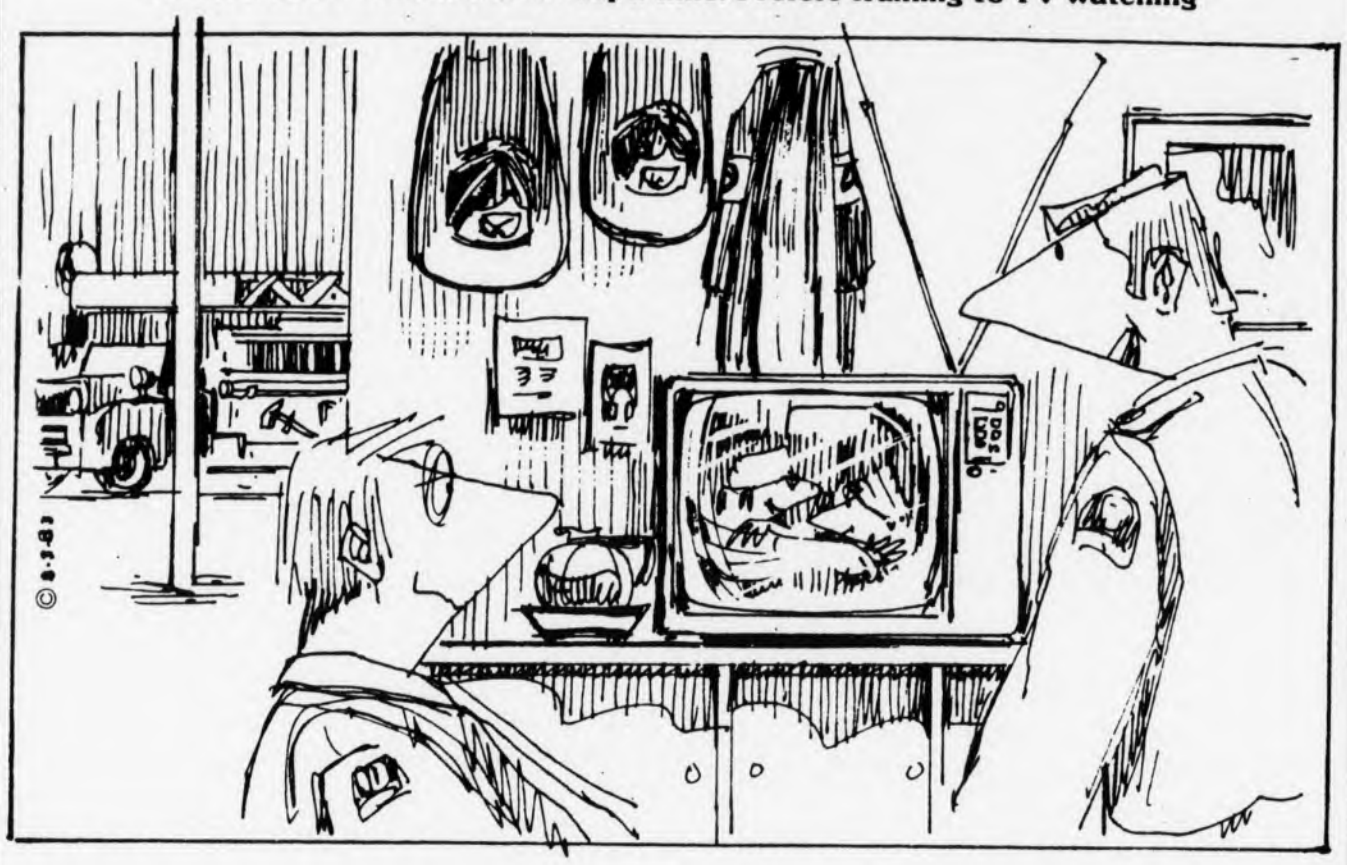
In short, we believe this is a disastrous, ill-considered project that needs to be halted in its tracks. Then, after it is halted, the governor and his able but Boston-brained transportation secretary, Mr. Salvucci, need to step back and take a comprehensive look at the entire region's transportation problem.

We should remember that the present never satisfactory, sometimes abominable, transportation system has arisen precisely because there hasn't been a truly comprehensive look at the region's transportation in the 35 years since the Maguire Report under Gov. Bradford. (It was that report that recommended the "circumferential highways," Routes 128 and 495, and "spokes," such as Routes 3 and 24.)

Thus, without a comprehensive plan, even as we expanded the M.B.T.A. to Braintree, we obliterated the rail right-of-way that might have permitted restored commuter rail service south and east of Braintree.

Thus one Governor (Dukakis) spent $40 million on access roads to one station (Quincy Adams) on a Red Line that hasn't the cars or the capacity to expand. Thus another governor (King) spent millions widening Route 3 between Weymouth and a couple of miles south of Weymouth without any idea of what to do next with the bottleneck that occurs when three lanes become two.

Thus almost no one has given any thought to how to make sense out of east-west traffic (Routes 27, 123, 58, 14 and 139); or out of Route 228 in Hingham or out of the congested roads that intersect with Route 3 (Route 18 in Weymouth, Route 53 in Hanover and Norwell, Route 139 in Pembroke and Marshfield, and Route 44 in Plymouth.



There is great pressure on Gov. Dukakis to build some combination of a third harbor tunnel to Logan Airport, and a widened, depressed Central Artery in Boston. The cost of such a combined project would be a couple of billion dollars, two billion that would eat up much of what Massachusetts can expect in transportation construction dollars in this decade.

The South Shore has many, many transportation complaints. But we must remember that there are worthy projects vying for the governor's attention all over the state. For some widening Route 2 between Athol and Greenfield is of vital economic concern. For our neighbors in Plymouth and Middleboro, the completion of Route 495 to Route 3 in Plymouth is a last best hope for attracting a share of "high tech" investment.

Thus, aside from a mammoth three-year traffic jam, and aside from the fact when traffic jam ends our traffic jam won't be alleviated, the $65 million cost of rebuilding the Southeast Expressway represents an important part of our share of the transportation dollars of the 1980s.

That share must be spent wisely. Many of you would probably put up with a three-year traffic jam if the end result were some real relief on the expressway. But as it seems to us, the projected three-year traffic jam represents good money chasing after bad with no end in sight. No one in authority seems to have asked the question: Where do we go from here? We just seem to build and rebuild and stop and go, and sometimes in our annoyance whisk governors out of office. Everyone, in fact, in the last 25 years.

NEWS ITEM — While talk of Public Safety Commissioner instead of two chiefs for police & fire depts. looms, there's trouble in the latter. Conflict between Chief, some of his officers and selectmen surfaces regarding use of rules adopted in 1938 & 1956. Chief has strong support from many sectors. Ends 'boat work' on dept. time. Prefers training to TV watching

"...Wonder how come we've been getting 1956 reruns and 1938 movies lately?... That's not in the contract..."

Eliopoulos deals rough

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Chief Sewer Operator, Manuel Salvador, complained to the Sewer Commissioners last week that Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos told him to "get the hell out of this office."

The office has a sign hanging outside which reads, "43 Elm St., Town of Cohasset Health Department and Sewer Department Office."

Salvador says Eliopoulos has requested he leave the building on previous occasions. "And she even told you to leave, Charlie," he said to his boss, Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis.

After the meeting, Salvador said Eliopoulos on another occasion told him and an engineer from Ward Associates to go out on the lawn to conduct their business.

"Further, when I used the telephone to call a state agency at the direction of DeSantis, Eliopoulos told me to get out of the secretary's chair."

Salvador said there was an informal agreement a few weeks ago between DeSantis and Eliopoulos that the Health Department was to have the use of the secretary mornings, and the Sewer Department in the afternoon. This agreement was never in the minutes of the meetings of the health or sewer boards, said Salvador.

Now that an additional part time secretary has been appointed, Salvador wants free access to the building to discuss deliveries of parts for the sewer plant, bills, correspondence, etc.

A police officer told the Mariner he heard the telephone ringing several weeks ago at the shed at the town dump.

Dump Supt. Joseph Laugelle, was at the rear of the property with an engineer, out of hearing. The officer answered the phone.

"When I said hello, a female person said, 'Who the h--- is this?' "

"Who are you?, I answered," the policeman said he replied.

"This is Elaine Eliopoulos, the Health Agent and I want to know what you are doing in that building!" he says was the response.

"Well, Mr. Laugelle isn't here," the officer said he answered, and hung up.

When a newspaper reporter asked to see the minutes several months ago, Eliopoulos said she would have to get an opinion from Town Counsel first, even though the minutes should be available to the public under the law.

Eliopoulos then ordered the reporter in front of several witnesses, including DeSantis, to leave the building, although the reporter was not creating a public disturbance.

The reporter complained to Board of Health member Barbara Kern who was just entering the building. Kern said, "I'm too busy to talk about it, you'll just have to deal with Elaine."

Salvador says if he does not get a satisfactory answer to his complaint, he will file a grievance. He has already discussed the matter with Executive Secretary Mark Lanza, and Selectmen Chairman Mary Jane McArthur. "They will talk to John Mullet of the Personnel Board," Salvador said.

The informal arrangement is not in the job description, Salvador said. "It was arranged when the Health

Credit Cards: Auto Repair Protection

People use credit cards for different reasons. For some, credit is a necessity; for others, a convenience. But did you ever think about using a credit card as a protection against faulty or unnecessary auto repairs?

Using a credit card instead of cash can save the day for a consumer who is having problems with an auto mechanic.

Suppose you take your car to the mechanic because of a noise in the power steering. The shop does a rack-and-pinion overhaul. You pay $180 with your credit card and drive home. The next afternoon, the noise is back. Another mechanic looks at the car and finds that the real problem was fluid leaking from the power steering pump. That will cost another $125 to repair.

A Negotiating Tool

What happens if the first mechanic refuses to make good on his mistake? If you had paid the bill with cash, you would be out $180 and might have to file suit to recover your money. If you paid by check, it would probably be too late to stop payment. Payment with a credit card not only gives you extra time, but is also an effective tool for negotiating with the mechanic.

You Can Refuse to Pay

According to Federal law, if you have a problem with goods or services purchased with your credit card, you have the same legal rights in dealing with the credit card issuer as you have with the auto mechanic. In other words, because you have the right to withhold payment from the auto mechanic for sloppy or incorrect repairs, you also have the right to refuse to pay the credit card company. Of course, you may withhold no more than the amount of the repair in dispute.

In order to use this important right, you must first try to work things out with the auto mechanic. Also, unless the card issuer owns or operates the repair shop (this might be true if your car is repaired at a gas station and you use a gas credit card,) two other conditions must be met:

* The auto mechanic's shop must be in your home state, or, if not in your state, within 100 miles of your current address.

* The cost of repairs must be over $50.

You can hold onto your money until the dispute is settled or resolved in court. The credit card company cannot make you pay interest or other penalty charges on the amount you are withholding until that time.

If you decide not to pay, send a letter to both the credit card company and the auto mechanic. Include the date of repair, the credit card used, your account number, why the service was unsatisfactory, and what you want in settlement of your dispute. It is a good idea to send the letter by certified mail with a return receipt requested.

This law was designed to protect you. Using it will put you in a good bargaining position with both time and money on your side.

Proceed with Caution

Many disputes will be settled at this point, with one side or both sides compromising to reach a settlement. Some will not be.

Sometimes the credit card company or the auto mechanic will take action to put a "bad mark" on your credit record because you did not pay your bill. You may not be reported as delinquent, but a creditor can report that you are disputing a charge. For this reason, you should know your rights under the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

This Act permits you to learn what information is in your credit file and to challenge any information you feel is incorrect. If the credit bureau cannot prove the information is true, they have to remove it. You also have the right to have your side of the story added to your file.

The mechanic may also feel strongly enough to go to court to collect his bill. If this happens, you will probably want to talk to a lawyer to make sure you are on solid legal ground.

Using a credit card will not solve all your auto repair problems. But it is a tool to use in tough negotiations. And auto repair complaints are among society's toughest.

This information was provided by the Federal Trade Commission. Complaints or requests for more information about your credit rights should be sent to the FTC, Credit Practices Division, Washington, D.C. 20580.

GOP Successes in the First 6 Months

From the opening of this legislative session in January to the summer recess, Republicans have prevailed some of the most important battles.

The first, of course, was the Dukakis administration attempt to override Prop. 2½ by allowing town officials in the 11 communities that have not yet reached the 2½ percent property tax rate. Debate on the Floor and tremendous public outcry eventually quashed that effort.

Later, after much discussion of anticipated revenues and the Republican call for a balanced budget, the governor finally admitted that his proposed spending was out of balance with anticipated revenues and refiled his budget recommendations.

Meanwhile, the governor's REAP (Revenue Reinforcement and Protection) package met with strong opposition in the House and was rejected on the first vote. Spurred by Republican arguments that REAP was, in fact, a revenue grabbing package affecting almost every person in the state, legislators rebelled against the governor and Democratic leadership and forced the package to be rewritten.

And, while the state was indulging in this constant revenue grabbing, legislation surfaced in the House for the state to subsidize the racing industry. We argued forcefully that it was ridiculous for the state to spend as much as $91 million to subsidize race tracks. This legislation was sent back to Committee and probably will not resurface.

The Lemon Law, a bill to protect new car owners from defective automobiles passed easily in the House and needs only one more vote in the Senate. Governor Dukakis is expected to sign it into law.

Another GOP bill to require that certain cases of child abuse be reported to District Attorneys as well as the Department of Social Services was signed recently by the Governor.

So far, it's been a good legislative year.

Board was busy, but now they have an extra typist."

"I therefore ask the Board of Sewer Commissioners to vote that the secretary will be available at all times to sewer personnel and not be set by certain hours," Salvador added.

"Town Accountant William Signorelli suggested a log book be kept to show the times, and which department the secretaries are working for daily," Salvador said.

The Sewer Commissioners agreed a log book should be maintained, and DeSantis said he would take up the complaint with the Chairman of the Board of Health.

A lighthearted look at the summer schedule

By the Rev. Edward Atkinson

Fourteen persons attended the discussion of summer services on July 17. A variety of ideas were offered but one view held by almost everyone present was that at a minimum the Meeting House ought to be accessible on Sunday mornings during the summer to persons who might wish to come there for quiet meditation or perhaps simply to see or be in that special place. The Parish Committee has concurred with this idea and voted to make provision for the Meeting House to be open on the four Sunday mornings in August.

For those who may be seeking a rationale for the common practice among our Unitarian Universalist churches of scheduling a vacation during the summer, Patrick O'Neil of the East Shore Unitarian Church in Ohio offers (tonque in cheek) the following:

WHY DO CHURCHES CLOSE IN THE SUMMER?

1. To everything there is a season. A time to be open and a time to be closed.

2. Unitarian ministers all drive ice cream trucks in the summer.

3. Michael Servetus was burned at the stake on the Feast of the Summer Solstice. In his memory we close for two months of mourning each summer.

4. Unitarians are the only group God can trust out of his sight for two months at a time.

5. All Unitarians are working on Master's degrees. Taking the summer off makes sense.

6. Small Unitarian churches can't afford air-conditioning.

7. The Unitarian Ecclesiastical Calendar was originally drawn up by the Harvard Divinity Faculty. The "Harvard Calendar," as it is known, dates back to 1825 and only has 10 months.

8. The summer hiatus is the Unitarians' revolt against the Calvinists work ethics.

9. Actually, closing for the summer is a Universalist tradition. It was a concession made by the Unitarians at the time of merger in 1961.

10. We close for the summer to save energy. Closing is ecologically sound.

11. Unitarians are really closet Episcopalians. For two months every year we are secretly very "high church."

12. We've always done it this way.

13. As Tevye says in "Fiddler" the reason we do it is Traditional!

The U.S. dollar is riding high and as a result, it is less expensive to get to Europe than it has been in years. It is estimated that a record 4.2 million Americans will travel to Europe this year. Due to deregulated charter flights, major airlines have had to cut prices to compete. The result is a 30% to 40% drop in air faires. Interest in traveling to Greece in particular, has surged due to the less expensive fares and cheap currency. Spain offers, perhaps, the best bargain for American travelers. If you have been thinking about a European trip, ask your travel agent for details. You are going to be surprised.

Sports roundup

Swim team undefeated

Cohasset Swim Center team is undefeated with a perfect 4-0 record after two swimming meet wins last week.

Cohasset beat Aquadux 306-257 and the Country Club from Brookline, 228-151.5.

THE COUNTRY CLUB

This meet was particularly interesting because the Brookline team was coached by Abbie White, who coached Cohasset for three years as well. Also, Brookline is a first-year team and had plenty of enthusiasm!

The meet was much closer than the score indicates, because many races were won or lost at the finish!

Diving Results: 16 years-old and under: Abby Adams, fourth place; Erin Powell, first place.

12 years-old and under: Jamie Hoffman, second place; Cindy Dormer, first place.

SWIMMING RESULTS

People placing first in individual results:

Adam Douglas (two firts); Allie Redfield (two firsts); Desiree Yess, Kristin Martin (two firsts); Eric Theriault, Com Crocker, Sarah Corbett, Liz Buckley, Lisa Clinton, Mark Sechen, Erin Sutherland, Sophie Redfield, Craig Carter and Debbie Dormer.

People placing second in individual results:

Gregg Delaney, Tim Conroy, Anastasia Pierce, Allie Donnelly, Colby Lawrence, Jan Peters, Joey Tehranian, Jennifer Martin, Jennifer Reidy, Topher Henderson, Jim Yess, Joanna Horn, Robbie Jackson, Jason Legere, Mindy Johnston, David Leahy and Christine Rooney.

People placing third in individual events were:

George Sechen, Gehrt Lubitz, Katie McNamara, Tim Getto, Eric Waal and Annie Hale.

People placing fourth in individual events were:

Alison Killilea and Amanda Douglas.

Many of these Cohasset swimmers are also first year or less experienced team members, and they deserve to be congratulated for their effort and especially for the great team spirit they showed.

Friday's swim meet against Aquadux was the most exciting official meet of the summer.

This was Cohasset's second victory over Aquadux this summer and proved to be a great deal more challenging than the first.

DIVING RESULTS

16 years-old and under: Julia Sechen, third place; Marybeth McNamara, second place.

12 years-old and under: Julie Bowdoin, second place; Madlyn MacDonald, first place.

SWIMMING RESULTS

Congratulations to all swimmers and divers who competed in the meet. There was a tremendous amount of team spirit and enthusiasm as well as fantastic swimming and diving ability!

Thanks to all timers, judges and volunteers who helped to make Friday's meet a success.

William A. Clapp 'The Yankee Carpenter'

Bill Clapp enjoyed walking the beach at Pemberton Point in Hull. He often said he'd like to get a lobster license and do some fishing when he retired.

A carpenter by trade, he enjoyed doing a job correctly. He took great pride in the craftsmanship of his work.

He was active in the community in a very unobtrusive way. No one ever remembers Bill making an impassioned speech on the town meeting floor, but he did the silent, solid kinds of things that count in a community.

Bill Clapp loved people, especially children, and he loved doing things for them. He was a 4-H Club leader and was active in the Scituate Human Concerns Program. Over a number of years, he quietly helped run the local, all-volunteer staffed food service and food stamp program.

He also taught Sunday School at the First Parish Unitarian Church in Scituate and also in Cohasset.

Rev. Edward Atkinson of the First Parish in Cohasset remembered Bill this way: "Had Norman Rockwell painted a cover for the 'Saturday Evening Post' entitled 'Yankee Carpenter,' it would have looked like Bill Clapp. A shaggy beard, cap set at a jaunty angle, rugged, weather-lined face, crinkles about his deepset eyes, methodical, sparse of speech, large powerful hands, but gentle, kindly with little children and animals, patient, slow to anger, shy, but friendly, modest and unassuming, he was a familiar figure as he quietly practiced his trade in our midst."

Born in Cohasset, he had lived in Scituate for 41 years before moving to Cohasset 10 years ago. He was a graduate of Scituate High School and a veteran of the Korean War.

Most recently, he was custodian of the Second Congregational Church, Cohasset.

Bill's friends remember his ability to be a friend to many different people, and his deep commitment to human rights issues.

Mr. Clapp, 51, died Friday, July 29 at South Shore Hospital, Weymouth, after suffering cardiac failure. He had been stricken at home with a heart attack two weeks previous to his death.

He leaves his wife, Nancy W. (Grant) Clapp; two daughters, Amber L. Clapp and Marlisa Clapp, both of Cohasset; two brothers, Howard Clapp and Robert Clapp, both of Scituate; and a sister, Priscilla A. Sindone of Scituate.

A memorial service was held August 3 at Pemberton Point Beach, Hull. Rev. John Benbow of the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset conducted the tribute.

Donations may be sent to the Bill A. Clapp Memorial Fund in care of the Rockland Trust Company, Cohasset.

Mary M. Cameron

Mary M. (Peters) Cameron, 89, a former resident of Quincy for 23 years, died Saturday at the Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home after a long illness.

Born on Prince Edward Island, Canada, she had lived in Dorchester and Quincy before moving to Cohasset.

Wife of the late Washington J. Cameron, she leaves two sons,Angus E. Cameron of Milford, Conn., and Joseph W. Cameron of North Quincy; two daughters, Theresa M. Rice of Hull and Mary A. Raymond of Easton; two sisters, Gertrude Deveau of Price Edward Island and Olive Oricchio of Medford; nine grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Tuesday at Sacred Heart Church, North Quincy.

Burial was in St. Joseph's Cemetery, West Roxbury.

Summer complaints guide to four-part Maine

By Lois Martin

All Maine is divided into four parts.

By me, anyway, if that has any merit and it won't if I start shooting my mouth off in knowing fashion around someone who's never left the state.

But so far as I'm concerned there's Southern Maine, which I consider goes almost up (my heritage would have me say 'down') to Augusta. And there's Central Maine, all around Augusta and just this side of Bangor. Northern Maine is most of the state (15 counties up there for your travel preparedness edification). And you don't really head into that part till you're above Lincoln.

PATCHES

Then there's Eastern Maine. I'm not going to let Bangor be part of that but you can start it after you're below Brewer toward Ellsworth and don't bother to finish till you've done all of Washington County.

There's no Western Maine. I don't care what they tell you.

Since I'm well aware many Massachusetts folks trek to Maine for vacation, I'm providing this little guide. If it's viewed as arbitrary, I'm willing to discuss it but I won't change my mind.

I left that homeland 18 years ago. But much of it has never left me. I feared I'd miss the geographical triumphs as much as I'd miss the people. That shore line and its charming nooks and crannies is clear yet in my mind. And the state in its entirety is ' e a spice which must never be out of my cupb of life's flavors.

Back to the business at hand. Remember when you go up there, you're summer people ('complaints'). Tourists who visit anywhere unfortunately created the worldwide concept that the natives are strange and possibly amusing. Practice that theory at your own risk.

If you're determined to go to Mt. Desert Island, and that's an obsession with people who haven't been to Maine before, don't skip Southwest Harbor/Northeast Harbor/Seal Harbor for Bar Harbor. It is an appealing water-locked section. But, forgive me Bar Harbor, the limited commercial aspects of some of the lesser known harbors have sustained the natural beauty more successfully (wait till the Chambers get hold of that definition, I may be blockaded from the island).

Anyway, why don't you do the County (that's Aroostock, Northern Maine)? When you head north out of Bangor, which ought to be a means to an end rather than an end in itself, you're going to believe I've lied to you two hours later when you're still in the Haynesville Woods.

You can detour left (I don't know my directions too well) for Millinocket, though I can't remember why except for their consistently good basketball teams.

If you keep going, you see, you'll come to Houlton, then on to Presque Isle and you'll see Mars Hill where I was born and where a statue still does not mark the spot. Won't take but a minute.

You can swoop into Canada from Houlton or pick up that neighboring country from Calais if you'd prefer. But you're headed in the wrong direction to get there from that particular spot.

Southern Maine is a lot like Southern New Hampshire unless you get out of the car. The character of a Maine resident is as available as that of a Massachusetts one. Yours for the acquaintanceship...in either state or any other for that matter.

Actually, when I suggest places to go for the essence of my kind of roots, I'm, tempted to say Aunt Ruth's or Aunt Lote's in Brooksville, or Aunt Phyl's down in Dennysville.

There's a difference in tourists that they draw in certain portions. Bar Harbor gets your transients. Brooksville gets it regulars year after year. And Aunt Ruth's pies are not the only draw.

The better veiled sections of coastal Maine haven't escaped property purchased by New Jersey residents, though, or others seeking escape to a quieter life.

Brooksville isn't known for its night life unless we are able to kick up a storm down at the cottage with friends.

And this is an inside motorist tip to swap greetings with people as if you weren't a summer person. Raise the right index finger from the wheel when you meet another car on the road. That's all and that's enough. Courtesy on the highways, as I remember it from Henry Perkins, my father.

There's an expression I'd like to define here that could be of value. I can't find any indication it's used anywhere in the world but in Maine. That's the term "Good Season," used as a time of day.

If three or four of us were to plan to leave on a trip in the morning, we'd likely agree we ought to get started Good Season. And we'd all be ready between 5 and 6 in the morning. If you want to reverse that and head home Good Season, that's between 4 and 5 in the afternoon, according to the way my Good Season training was instilled.

Another time and season, we ought to address the expression " Cuffin right along." No need to overdo education when a vacation's in store.

So, be my guest, so to speak. Visit Maine. I intend to before the summer's over. And if I don't watch myself and explain my license plate, someone up there'll offend me by telling me how to eat lobster.

Have a wonderful time. Watch out for tourist trauma because it can deny you the best of Maine. Just be as nice as you are and before long they won't be able to resist a trip to Massachusetts where all those pleasant people live.

Otherwise they'll put that toll on the Maine Turnpike they've been talking about: $10 to get in and 10 cents to get out.

You drive in through meadows strewn with seasonal wildflowers. But that's only your entry to the good life at The Meadows, The Green Company's new community of attached single family homes in Hingham. The architectural style is true to the farm-house heritage of the community. The construction and detailing have been accomplished with obvious pride.

The Meadows offers a selection of two and three bedroom homes with unexpected details like master suites with private fireplaced sitting areas, large country kitchens for informal entertaining, separate dining rooms for more formal occasions, hidden corners for quiet contemplation, and a mix of ceiling heights and styles. In addition there are large private courtyards, two-car garages, full basements, a swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. And best of all, this very civilized lifestyle is near major highways to the cultural delights of Boston and vacation areas to the North and South.

Prices range from $157,000 to $210,000 during this, our opening period. Furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street, one mile to our entrance. Go to the market these days and what do you see? Men! Lots of men. According to a survey, more and more males are taking to the aisles in search of sustenance. Not for them a stop to say "hi" to a long-lost friend who relates his life history while blocking the aisle. Also contrary to most women shoppers, is the news that a man seldom uses a pre-planned, cost-saving list. No doubt the manager develops a gleam in his eye, aware that men are more apt to buy on impulse, spurn coupons, seldom seek out sale items, rarely comparison shop and simply can't pass up the snacks and candy aisles without loading up their carts. If they had planned their meals for the coming week and had decided to try this recipe of Bob York's, they would check it out before leaving to make sure they had the necessary ingredients for

SWEET AND SOUR MEAT BALLS

1 and 1/2 lb. ground beef
4 T grated onion
1 egg
1 tsp. salt
2 T lemon juice
1 lemon, thinly sliced
1/4 c. seedless raisins
1/8 tsp. pepper
3 T cornstarch
2 T vegetable oil
1½ c. beef stock or broth
3 T sugar
6 gingersnaps, crushed

Mix meat, onion, egg, 1 tsp. salt and pepper. Form this mixture into 1" balls, lightly roll in cornstarch. Brown meatballs in vegetable oil in deep skillet. Cover and cook over low heat 35 min. Stir in gingersnaps and cook 10 min. more. Serves six.

Men used to grumble if asked to empty the garbage and drying the dishes was beneath their dignity, but now they freely confess to clearing the table after a meal, unloading the dishwasher and some even admit to actually enjoying cooking. Many are in their glory at this time of year as they preside over the picnic grill, so here's the chance to cook with a flair, trying out Terri Long's

FISH KABOBS EL GRECO

1/2 c. lemon juice
1/4 c. olive oil
1½ tsp. oregano
2 bay leaves
1/2 tsp. salt
1 clove garlic, minced
1 T chopped parsley

To marinate: Combine lemon juice, oil, oregano, bay leaves, salt, garlic and parsley. Cut 1 lb. swordfish or halibut into 20 one inch cubes. Pour marinade over fish in large bowl and cover. Refrigerate 30 min. to two hours. When ready to grill, thread fish on four 10" skewers, alternating with these vegetables:

4 bay leaves
1 can (14 oz.) artichoke hearts
1 large green pepper, cut in 8 pieces
8 large fresh mushrooms
8 pieces lemon peel

Allow 1 bay leaf, 2 artichokes, 2 pieces green pepper, 2 mushrooms and 2 pieces lemon peel per skewer. Baste with marinade. Grill 4 to 5" from gray coals (low heat), turning occasionally and basting with reserved marinade for 8 to 10 min., or until fish flakes readily when prodded with fork. Serves 4, with only 285 calories per serving.

Don't attend Prelude Concert Series non-event

By Moira McCarthy

The Prelude Concert Series is sponsoring their first annual non-event, and they're begging you not to come.

"There's nothing happening, there's nowhere to go, and we're hoping that everyone will not attend," Public Relations Director Nancy Murray-Young said.

Sound confusing? The sponsoring of non-events by music clubs is new only to the Massachusetts area.

Young, along with founder and Artistic Director Barbara Lane, stumbled across the idea at a convention, when they learned that the Los Angeles Symphany and the Southern Connecticut College of Performing Arts sponsor one every year.

"The idea is to give people the chance to support arts in their community without disrupting their schedule at all," Young explained. "They don't need a babysitter, they don't have to go to the hairdresser, and they don't have to buy a new dress. This makes it easy for you. If you can't come, it's OK. There's no place to go."

The plan is to sell tickets, and you will receive a ticket, at three dollars a piece. Barometers located in the Mariner, at the Scituate Art Association gallery, and one somewhere in North Scituate, will document the amount raised during the entire non-event.

The non-event will take place for the entire month of August, with a rain date of September.

"That means if it rains at all in August, we'll keep selling through September," Young said.

Young pointed out that this is the first major public fundraiser that the Prelude Concert Series has launched.

The Series is now in its second season, and according to Lane, as well as every review written about the Series to date, it's been more than just successful.

"Everyone is getting involved," Lane said, pointing to a list of contributors that's been growing by the day, "We are getting more and more donations all the time. And we draw an audience from so many different towns." She added that at the last concert, there were people from Foxborough and Cambridge.

The concerts always take place in the function room of the Scituate Public Library, and according to Lane, when they're through setting it up for a concert, "you wouldn't know it was the same room."

"It's acoustically perfect," Young added. "And aesthetically it's wonderful. We hang plants and paintings. It's the best atmosphere you can provide for a concert series.

"The closeness to the artist brings the audience into a kind of intimacy with the artist. An audience loves to hear the flutist's breath, or see someone sweating over playing their instrument," she added.

And every artist that the series has presented thus far has been of international fame.

"Barbara does an excellent job of finding performers that are worthy of our audience," Young said.

They're in "desperate need of a concert grand piano," Lane said, and would like to set up an endowment fund as soon as possible. The piano they are eyeing markets in the vicinity of $11 thousand.

They also need carpet for the stage, and some folding chairs.

"These are valid goals," Murray said. She added that like the stage, anything that is donated to them will be left in the library for public use at any time. She pointed out that if the League of Women Voters wanted to use the stage for a candidates night in the Library, they would be more than welcome.

The Series uses all the money they recieve to put on their four concerts a season. None of the directors recieve salaries.

Ticket sales for concerts only account for about one-third of the Series' annual income.

"If we charged for what we needed, we couldn't do it," Young said. "The idea is not just to make this music accessable, but to make it affordable as well."

Tickets for a single concert run at $5, and a subscription for a year is $20. Although the subscription does not give a financial break, it does entitle the holder to special extras, including "Meet the performer" wine and cheese receptions after each concert, priority seating for each concert (the first to subscribe gets the best seat), and advanced notice of each concert.

And so, with the help of the South Shore, the Series directors hope to go on improving at the steady pace they have been, without becoming an expensive night on the town.

"As time goes on and inflation is rising, the cost of performers goes up. We've got to meet the cost without passing it on to the audience," Young said.

These three directors, along with Treasurer Lois Murray, Reception Coordinator Lucky Lions, and Secretary Rosemary Jeannero, urge you not to attend the non-event fund raiser. Tickets will be available through the directors, and other volunteers.

"Don't go out and buy a dress, and don't get your hair done," Young said, "We expect everyone not to attend."

Cohasset's maritime question & answer

As a preview of the Cohasset Historical Society Walking Tour Aug. 7, Society curator David Wadsworth was asked to highlight some questions and answers about Cohasset's maritime past. (Ed. Note)

1. What Cohasset resident was a member of the famous Boston Tea Party, served in the American Revolution as a Sergeant, then started a fishing business located on Border Street which lasted from 1790 to 1928, and whose name still is used to describe the stone wharf he constructed for his fishing schooners? Answer: Capt. Abraham Tower (1752-1832), who built Tower's Wharf and started the family business which ended in 1928 with the death of his grandson Newcomb Bates Tower.

2. The area now known as Government Island at Cohasset Harbor originally was part of the town of Scituate. When was it annexed by Cohasset and why did it get its present name of Government Island? Answer: it was annexed to Cohasset in 1837 following petitions to the Legislature by citizens. The name "Government Island" came into useage following the establishment by the U.S. Lighthouse Service of a shore facility on the island for the construction and maintenance of the lighthouse at Minot's Ledge, circa 1855.

3. The building now called "Legion Hall" on Summer Street has been known by at least three different names in the past. What are the names and where was the building originally located? Answer: Legion Hall was the U.S. Customs and Immigration Office for Cohasset during the mid-1800's. It also was the Harbor District Schoolhouse for some years, and at the turn of the century became known as "Guild Hall." Its original location was just across Summer Street, in the small crescent-shaped park. Guild Hall was moved across the street in 1916.

4. What are the names of the three ancient stone wharves which line Border Street at the edge of the Harbor and by whom were they built? Answer: the three stone wharves are, 1. Lawrence Wharf, built by Elisha Deane before 1832 and named for a later owner, Josiah O. Lawrence. Lawrence Wharf now is the Town Landing and holds a memorial to the explorer Capt. John Smith who visited the harbor in 1614. 2. Bates Wharf, probably the oldest stone wharf at the harbor, first showed on the town's tax lists in the 1750's, was built by shipowner Samuel Bates. It is the location of the Old Salt House, one of the original buildings constructed by the Bates family at the harbor. 3. Tower's Wharf, built by Abraham Tower in circa 1790, now the site of a large restaurant.

5. What is the early historical name for Cohasset Harbor? Answer: the earliest reference to Cohasset Harbor appears in records of the Town of Hingham at least as early at 1690, and it was called "Shipcove." Sailing vessels were built on the shores of the harbor before the year 1700. Later the name became two words, and for many years the harbor was called "Ship's Cove," often shortened to "Cove." The old name for Elm Street, leading to the harbor was "Ship Cove Lane."

6. During the early and mid-1800's, Cohasset's main industry was mackerel fishing. In what year did the town rank 4th among all Massachusetts fishing ports in size of the mackerel catch landed, how many barrels of mackerel were processed in that year, and what year saw the greatest number of mackerel landed at Cohasset wharves? Answers: (a) In 1845 Cohasset ranked 4th in size of mackerel catch behind Gloucester, Boston and Wellfleet. Cohasset's catch that year was 17,584 and 3/8 barrels landed and packed. (b) The year 1848 was the peak year for Cohasset mackerel fishermen with 22,967 barrels landed. At this time there were at least 50 fishing schooners operating from Cohasset Harbor.

7. Numerous Cohasset families trace their origins to a group of islands located in the eastern mid-Atlantic. What is the present name of the Islands, and what were they known as during the 19th century? Answer: The Azores, known in years past as the "Western Islands."

Second walking tour Aug. 7

The Cohasset Historical Society will conduct the second of its three 55th Anniversary summer walking tours of historic Cohasset on Sunday, August 7 at 3 p.m.

"Pilgrimage to Cohasset's Past — A Maritime Heritage" will meet at the Society's headquarters, the Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer St., Cohasset and walk to the town's nearby harbor, once the site of Cohasset's mackerel fishing industry and the location of the construction of the famous Minot's Ledge Lighthouse.

Tour guides will be Charles G. Fink of the town's Harbor Study Committee, Roger Leonard of the Cohasset Historical Commission, and David Wadsworth, curator of the Historical Society.

The "Age of Sail" of this 18th and 19th century fishing village will be explored during a pleasant walk along the shores of the harbor, itself once known as "Ship Cove." The tour is free; refreshments will be served, and all are invited.

Summer wind ensemble concert

The South Shore Music Circus will lend its facilities to the South Shore Conservatory for the final concert of the Summer Wind Ensemble Saturday, Aug. 6 at 10:30 a.m.

Young musicians in Grades 7 through Grades 12, chosen by audition, will have completed five weeks of music study at this special summer program in the Hingham school.

The concert will feature both the Junior and Senior Ensembles. The Senior Ensemble will have just returned from a concert trip to the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y. Frank L. Battisti, head of the Music Education Dept. at the New England Conservatory, is the director of the program and will conduct the ensemble.

Conducting the Junior Ensemble will be A. Douglas Wauchope, assistant director of the South Shore Conservatory and a teacher of music education on the South Shore.

The concert at the Circus is free.

Angler's corner . . .

By Greg Derr

One of Murphy's Laws states that when an angler travels a thousand miles to go fishing the fishing is always great at the spot he left.

From what my friends have said, the fishing has been super in our area. Bluefish have invaded the beaches all along the south shore in huge schools, having been drawn from the Cape by unseasonably warm waters and massive numbers of pogies (Menhaden) that are feeding off our beaches.

Nantasket beach has been the most consistant feeding area for the toothy critters, especially near the M.D.C. parking lot. For the most part you can't count on catching them in any one spot at any time; they travel all along the coast chasing pogies. To help yourself, carry a fishing rod in your car all the time, so when the fish move onto the beach you have a shot at catching one.

Blues usually don't stay in a feeding frenzy too long (about one hour).

If you are on the beach, keep your eyes on the horizon for large flocks of seagulls; they're a good indication that feeding bluefish are in the area. The sweet smell of watermelon can also lead to blues. It means they are feeding so heavily that they vomit the fish they've swallowed.

Strong fishing gear is a must in the surf when catching blues, since they are hard fighters and powerful jumpers. Twenty pound mono is best as it allows good casting distance and good pulling ability. A steel or wire leader two feet long is a must for protection against their sharp teeth and fins.

If fish are feeding on pogies, use a y[illegible] or gold surface popper; if feeding on mackerel, [illegible] a green popper.

Cast the plug on the outside of the school to keep the fish from being scared and keep more than one fish from hitting the plugs.

Some experienced surfmen will strip all the treble hooks from their plugs and replace them with large single hooks to allow for a quick release from the fish's mouth.

Unless you have before, don't use a gaff in the surf; there is no faster way I know of to send yourself or someone else, to the hospital. To land bluefish in the surf, let a wave carry them in to the shallows, then drag them away using the steel leader. Be sure to use fishing pliers to unhook fish; blues have hundreds of razor sharp teeth.

Don't forget there are plenty of other fish in the sea. Mackerel are still plentiful along the coast of Marshfield, extending to Plymouth. One day last week a school of striped bass chased a school of mackerel into the mouth of Green Harbor.

Hopefully some lucky angler was there to take advantage of the occasion. Stripers are being caught in the delta of the North and South Rivers on live eels and chunks of cut pogie and mackerel. Seaworms and razor clams also work. For best results, try the hour before and the hour after high tide, drifting the bait with the current.

We have reports that a 50 pound bass was caught in this fashion just last week.

Ted Abbadessa of Cohasset caught a 57 pound halibut off Minot Light last week while fishing for bass. He caught it on a live pogie. Halibut are a rare catch in our area, especially in summer.

The giant bluefin tuna have started to feed on Stellwagon Bank off Provincetown, attracting hundreds of anglers to the area. Paul Unangst of Green Harbor was the first local angler to catch a tuna. His fish was harpooned near the H-buoy on the way back from P-Town. Since then, a few fish have been hooked using baited hooks.

School board delays action on new attendance policy

By Theresa Sullivan

The School Committee postponed action on its new attendance policy because it includes clauses which could violate state laws.

At Monday's School Committe meeting, Superintendent Eugene Crowell questioned the legality of "parental discretion days," whereby a parent will be allowed to take his child out of school for reasons other than illness.

According to state law a parent or guardian could be fined for causing a minor to be absent from school.

Crowell said he consulted an attorney who advised the "parental discretion" clauses be removed from the policy.

Committee vice-chairman Jack Langmaid requested no decision be made Monday night because he wanted input from those parents and teachers who had attended previous workshops.

He said he didn't feel right changing the policy without the parents attending the meeting. One parent and one teacher attended the School Committee meeting Monday.

Langmaid also requested the committee delay action until school board member Diana Kornet returned.

The parental discretion clause had been added to avoid penalizing students who were taken out of school because of family trips or college visits.

Crowell said the lawyer he spoke to suggested removing the clause and allowing each student to get permission from the principal in advance. This will allow the principal to monitor the excused absences.

Langmaid disagreed.

"You take out parental discretion days and face the problem that has been going on for years," he said. A double-standard exists whereby the star athlete is given permission to miss school and still attend practice, he added.

"We're trying to free up the teachers so they can teach the kids who have a legitimate absence. The only way you can do that is by some kind of rules," Langmaid said.

School board member Joe Nedrow said rules should be flexible and allow room for individual exceptions.

He said a youth's academic standing should be taken into consideration when deciding whether a student

Who's awake on the midnight shift?

By Mike Berger

Question: Who officially mans the Fire Dept. desk after midnight?

Answer: No one, according to Fire Chief Martin Dooley.

Reason: It is not stipulated in the firefighters union contract and is a subject of negotiations.

This has upset Dooley and brought to his attention by Sewer Dept. Plant Supervisor Manny Salvador.

Recently the Fire Dept. failed to answer a sewer plant emergency alarm after midnight.

This alarm detects leaks in the chlorine tanks.

Fortunately, a second alarm goes to the police station and Salvador was alerted to the alarm by a telephone call from the police.

On one occasion, Salvador's wife received a call from the Fire Dept. five minutes after Salvador dressed and left for the sewer plant in responds toa police call regarding malfunctioning sewer plant equipment.

When a call comes in at night the phone rings in the firefighters sleeping quarters and the officer's room where one firefighter sleeps with a telephone by his bed.

Dooley says there is a question about the speed on response and he acknowledges a firefighter should have called Salvador before the police officer.

High society - it ain't what it used to be

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Where has Cohasset "High Society" gone to over the years?

Reflecting back, "The Great Depression" of the 1930s ultimately became the leveler of Cohasset society by preparing a way for the middle class influx of the 1950s.

Fifty years prior to the Great Depression, Cohasset had two main classes: the summer estate residents and the year around workers.

The bulk of the workers consisted of Portuguese lobstermen, Beechwood farmers, Italian gardeners, Irish maids and a sprinkling of "Yankee" businessmen.

The summer estates were marked by the number of servants employed.

For example the Caravelles property at the junction of Nichols and Atlantic Avenue at one time employed 53 servants as gardeners, maids, cook, chauffeurs, scrub ladies and assistants at the boat house.

The daughter of Cyrus McCormack (inventor of the reaper) decided she did not want tradesmen coming to her front door over the entrance driveway of the Caravelles.

It was said she looked with envy at the land of the abutting estate of Red Oaks.

Red Oaks employed 13 servants to service 19 rooms including a ballroom wing, seven bathrooms fitted with marble fixtures, a basement room for hanging ducks and other game in the hunting season, five coal bins for three furnaces and formal gardens.

McCormack purchased the Red Oaks access driveway for her tradesmen's entrance because the ledge made a back entrance on her own 13 acres impossible.

She even built a $10,000 causeway over Little Harbor to provide a new entrance for Red Oaks.

Red Oaks was owned by one of the owners of Bigelow and Kennard, the Boston jewelers who for many years rivaled Shreve, Crump and Low. But the estate was lost to bank foreclosure in the 1930s.

The Caravelles is a large apartment house now and much of the property has been sold to housing developers.

In the 1940s, when one of the graduating classes of the high school numbered 16 students, youths gathered at Sandy Beach to sit close to the summer theater stars such as actor William Holden.

It was said they looked with envy as the Logan cousins "wheeled in convertibles."

Friday and Saturday nights, youths gathered at the Community Center which was then a large houseat the corner of Sohier and North Main Streets. That house is converted to condominiums now.

Youths played pingpong, enjoyed "first run" movies (even before shown in Boston theaters.), danced and played tennis on courts now occupied by a house.

Former State Rep. Nate Hurwitz (Mary Jeannette's father) kept a watchful eye on their activities.

It was said more daring youths stole their parents liquor after parties and others went on "joy rides" to Boston.

Other youths gathered at Sunnyfields on Elm Street, now "Reflection Hair Salon,' for ice cream on hot summer evenings and they mourned that in the winter, "everything is dead in this town."

For some romance, some of the male youths grinned when daughters of some of the estate owners flirted

Blood pressure check

Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy is sponsoring a free blood pressure check once a month either the first or second Monday of the month from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Parking lot needs special permit

Town Counsel John Slater has ruled Kimballs By The Sea must obtain a Special Permit from the Board of Appeals under the Cohasset zoning bylaw for a proposed parking lot on Pleasant St. Building Inspector Robert Dennis says the property in question is in the floodplain and watershed protection district.

Slater wrote "Filling of land in a Flood Plain and Water Shed Protection District may not proceed unless a special permit is obtained from the Board of Appeals.

School registration Aug. 22-31

The Cohasset Public Schools will hold registration for all new students entering the system from 9 a.m. to 12 noon daily Monday, Aug. 22 through Wednesday, Aug. 31.

Parents are urged to phone for an appointment to assist administrators in making the registration as smooth as possible.

Singles' event

This week, Thursday, Aug. 11, unmarried men and women are invited to meet the Mariner at the Bridgwaye Inn from 8 to 10 p.m.

That gathering is part of the Mariner's interview/information effort in preparation for the Oct. 12 special publication "Singles on the South Shore."

This is the first in-depth issue of its kind. And because the residence is comprised of at least one-third of unmarried adults, the single style bears interest.

There has been a high response to this first business/social meeting. There will be at least one other. Thursday evening the supplement will be fully explained with an outline of content. And the experts on the subject, in this case single people, will be invited to participate through interviews, suggestions, essays and comments.

For more information, call the Mariner's Lois Martin, executive editor, 837-5625 or 383-6731.

Hazardous Adv. Board meeting

The Hazardous Material Advisory Committee will meet Thursday, Aug. 11 at 7:30 p.m. at the Water Department, King Street.

Topics to be discussed include: hazardous material spill procedure, educational meetings plans and hazardous material survey progress.

Boat decals to be mailed

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza acknowledged only 50 per cent of boat mooring owners who paid their permit fees have picked up their boat decals. New regulations adopted at town meeting called for all boats on moorings in the harbor to display the decals to show the fees had been paid.

Lanza said collection of mooring fees had never been better, with a larger per cent of owners paying up earlier than ever before.

After a conference with Harbormaster Harry Ritter, Lanza said they had decided to mail out the remaining decals this year.

Boats not displaying the required decal may be removed from the moorings by the harbormaster and moorings may be pulled.

Appeals Board decision not filed

The Board of Appeals has not yet filed their decision on the application of the Music Circus to serve beer and wine. The Music Circus plans to serve wines and champagne, not beer, according to the testimony of Manager Ronald Rawson.

Burtram Pratt, Circus clerk, when questioned Monday said he had not yet received the decision. "I understand, informally, they rejected our application, but if they do not reply within the specified time of the public hearing, the permit shall be deemed granted," Pratt said.

The Board of Appeals hearing was held May 24. Under the zoning bylaw they have 90 days to render a decision on a special permit.

The Town Clerk's Office has not received the decision as of Tuesday morning.

Three girls rescued

Lobsterman John Winters is credited with helping to save three Cohasset youths who clung to their capsized sailboat for 20 minutes Monday, Aug. 1. About 1:30 p.m. Winters spotted what looked like a towel waving about two and a half miles away from Cohasset Harbor. When he approached he saw Nancy Kuntz, Lauren Sandblom and Sheila Keating holding on to their 16-foot catamaran in choppy waters. The wind conditions were brisk. The winds began custing and whipping up choppy white-tipped waves. The youths tried to return to the harbor but a stiff wind hit at the same time as a large wave and the boat fiipped over backwards. The seas were too choppy and the water too cold to swim to shore. Sandblom spotted the lobsterboat, stood on the overturned hull and waved the T-shirt. Joining the rescue were the Scituate and Hull Coast Guard, Assistant Harbormaster Joe Becker and Cliff Dickson and Dave Marks of the Cohasset Yacht Club. The boat was later hauled to the harbor.

Cox trust $2.5 mil. for 34 years

Money will be awarded at the rate of $2.5 million over the next 34 years to charitable organizations as a result of the will of the late Jessie Bancroft Cox.

Trustees of her estate and charitable trust announced the latest program. They are Cox's two children William Cox Jr. and Jane Cox MacElree and Attys. Roy Hammer and George Shaw.

They will review applicants for grants and announce award winners four times a year.

Grant Management Associates of Powers and Hall of Boston will administer the grants.

Ala Reid, grant administrator, said the grants will benefit education, health and the environment in New England. Examples of health related requests might be to expand a nurse training program, establish a scholarship fund or provide health care to rural area or to train minorities for careers in medicine.

The trustees said the goals of the grants will explore new approaches and provide increased access to education, protect and enhance the region's resources and improve its level of health.

The grants are restricted to non profit and charitable organizations but students and individuals are not eligible.

Grants will fall under two categories: the Cox Development Program and the Cox New Initiatives Program.

The Development Program will provide funding to an organization ranging from one to five years. The grants will be geared toward producing large scale changes within the organization or its geographic area.

The New Initiatives Program will go to agencies addressing urgent programs on a one-time basis. These grants will be based on immediacy.

Deadlines for submitting proposals are Oct. 31, Jan. 31, April 30 and July 31 of each year. Reid said all applicants should call Grant Management Associates for guidelines. To be eligible, organizations must have established a non-profit status from the Internal Revenue Service.

After 34 years the base fund will go to grandchildren and heirs of the Cox estate.

In a related matter, Yankee Oil and Gas Company bought the estate. The company plans to make the mansion its corporate headquarters. A meeting before the appeals board will be held Tuesday, Aug. 23 at 8 p.m. at Town Hall.

Who's awake on the midnight shift?

"The problem is the response from here and the fault lies here. I am aware of this happening once and I will be speaking to the firefighting unit about this," Dooley said.

Dooley added he wants to maintain an active house watch from midnight to 6:30 a.m. He is worried that if someone comes to the door no one will be awake to answer it.

Dooley, a former lieutenant in the Hartford, Conn. department, said he is accustomed to a 24-hour active operation.

But after discussions with Executive Secretary Mark Lanza, Dooley knows this is a subject of change of working conditions and must be negotiated into the firefighters contract.

Lanza said he is "100 percent" behind Dooley on the 24-hour watch but the issue depends on selectmen.

Not all area Fire Depts. have an around-the-clock dispatcher.

Dooley said Scituate has around the clock dispatcher and before the dispatcher, the town had an around the clock housewatch. Hingham does not have a midnight to 6 a.m. dispatcher and Dooley isn't sure about the Hull Fire Dept.

Acting Capt. Conley

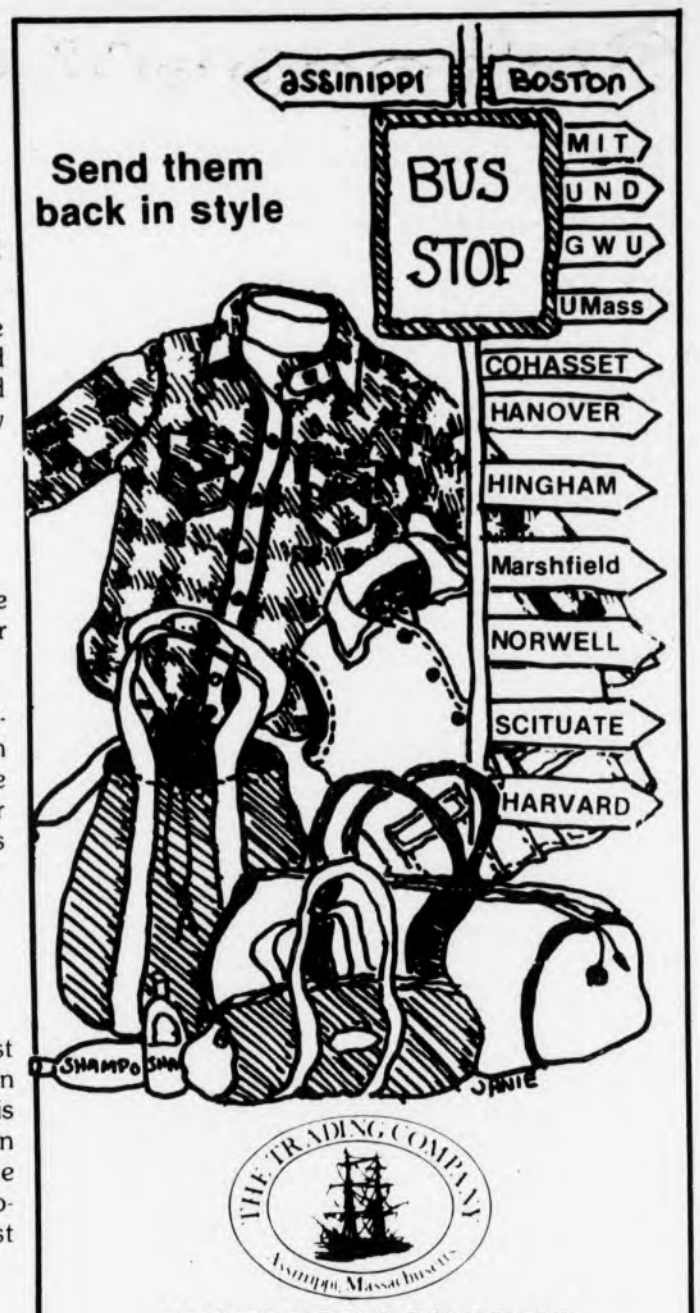
For several weeks Dooley has not had the services of Acting Capt. Richard Conley. Dooley does not know when Conley will be returning to work.

Lanza said Conley is on sick leave and is recovering from lower back surgery. He does not know when Conley will be returning.

Dooley has asked for a doctor's letter asking when Conley might be returning but selectmen have tolc Lanza and Dooley to stop the request.

As a result when another firefighter is out in additior to Conley on the regular shift, the town must spenc overtime money.

In addition Dooley said there is no officer responsible for the paperwork and fire reports which are required by the state Fire Marshal's office. This was to be called to selectmen's attention by a letter from Dooley Tuesday night



Acting Chief

Twice Senior Capt. Roger Lincoln has refused to be Acting Chief when Dooley is away from Cohasset for over 72 hours.

On one occasion Dooley notified Lanza and selectmen the Acting Chief was Capt. Mark Trask. On another occasion when Dooley had a death in the family, Scituate Fire Chief Walter Stewart covered for Dooley. Dooley appointed Trask because Capt. James Lee Gurry lives in Quincy and Trask lives in Scituate.

Swapping off duty

The firefighters union has filed a grievance against Dooley's request for a filing within 72 hours when firefighters wish to switch duty. Dooley feels this is management right and asked firefighters to fill out an appropriate form. This was never before asked of the men to file within a 72-hour period. Dooley acknowledges there are emergency cases when the request does not have to be filed within the 72-hour period.

Straits Pond stench problem confirmed

The stinking brown algae which plagues Cohasset and Hull residents living near Straits Pond during the spring and summer has been a problem for over 30 years.

This was confirmed this week by Hull Acting - Highway Supt. Edward Parent.

The pond forms the boundary between the two towns but the issue is regional and pose different problems, said Cohasset Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulous.

The pond is extremely shallow with an average depth only 3.3 feet.

A 1980 report given to Hull officials by special consultants said the depth combined with the lack of inflowing water during the summer means even moderate inputs of phosphorus to the pond will result in "nuisance algae populations and poor water clarity."

Cohasset Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said a state biologist told Eliopoulous and Selectman Chairman Mary Jane McArthur the algae can be combated with copper sulfate.

But Lanza added the biolated said sulfate in the compoud would add to the rotten egg smell. Biologist Lenore Velutevich said the state would research the possibility of using other chemicals.

One other smell cause could be acid rain which has been identified as an increasing culprit.

Eliopoulous added there is a possiblity the leachate from the Hull landfill might enter the pond through the Weir River tributary which feeds the pond at North Cohasset.

The Cohasset town landfill on Cedar Street is believed to drain into Rattlesnake Run which drains under Jerusalem Road and into the pond.

Consulants have said the major sources of phosphorus to the pond are surface water runoff from urban and residential development and the discharge of untreated sewage from residential dwellings.

The report says, "Water quality in the pond reflects high nutrient concentrations and at certain times of the year fecal coliform bacteria levels are in excess of the state Class B standards."

About 20 residents waited outside the Hull selectmen's meeting last week. Residents wanted to discuss the problem with selectmen but the subject was delayed to Thursday, Aug. 11 at 9 p.m.

Some Hull residents believe some of the problem is caused by Cohasset septage. Consultant recommendations included a survey of Black Rock Road and Windy Hill areas in Cohasset; correction of failing septic systems in Cohasset; upgrading of storm sewer systems in both towns and a separation of the sanitary storm drain connection on Richards Avenue in Hull.

Eliopoulous said she has taken random samples of the pond water and acknowledged getting a significant coliform count at one location. But she added she has not retaken a sample there to verify if a problem exists.

Parent said the state is going out to bid for new tidal gates and flash boards since there are problems with the current gates.

He added when the new gates are installed, the pond will be drawn down to expose the bottom.

The smell

Ruth Marcanthony of Jerusalem Road said she was forced to leave her home for three nights during the end of July because of the smell. But she added there should be some praise for the work suggested by Eliopoulous.

She suggested Cohasset should push out the algae into the ocean. The algae congregates in the coves on the irregular shoreline from the Cohasset side into the main channel.

Recently workers from the Cohasset Tree and Park Depts, Highway Dept. and CETA workers worked together to push the algae out into the middle of the pond.

They wore hip boots and used Fire Dept and private boats.

By Aug. 4 much of the surface water was free from the algae.

Marcanthony and Joseph Crossen, a resident, agree most of the remaining algae and smell are at the Black Rock Beach end of the pond.

Parent said the algae is terrible "stuff to handle just like a think slimy jello."

For weeks the tide has not been high enough to let a great amount of salt water into the pond from the tidal gates. Parent planned to allow salt water in Tuesday when the tide was expected to reach a height of 11.8 feet.

Parent said when the water is let into the pond he soon receives three calls from the Cohasset side followed later with calls from Hull homeowners. - Residents said their cellars are wet.

The issue, Parent said, is homeowners may have to decide between salt water flushing and wet cellars versus the smell.

Karen Babb, 7, works during an art class as the Common.

with a handsome lifeguard.

But 1955 saw the beginning of a heavy influx of young married couples from Boston and neighboring suburbs.

Cohasset was seen in the real estate market as accessible to employment to Boston, a good place to bring up children, and of course the luring of the sea.

The couples were attracted by the beach, sailing, tennis, golf, skating, athletics, ocean views, antique homes and a beautiful Town Common.

The new citizens joined the subscription dances and cocktails which preceded the dances. They were eager to become one of the 300 members of St. Anthony's Ladies Sodality or the 200 members of the Community Garden Club founded by Polly Logan to support the Community Center.

Some joined the Cohasset Women's Club which was then directed by Mary Jeannette Murray and others went to night classes at Cohasset High School and or enrolled their children in Cub or Girl Scouts.

In the 1960s newcomers became members of the theater group or the local artists. Young matrons joined one of the two bridge clubs which rotated meetings at member houses. One club was famous for its luncheon food and the other was marked by wine.

One story remembered focused on one pretty wife of a Bethlehem Steele executive who transferred to the area. She was invited to a Cohasset cocktail party only to find she was in the midst of local "key club" members. She was outraged to find they had considered her a target for their swinging activities.

In the late 1970s other citizens were outraged by reports of local promoters who used a hall for wild bachelor parties and strippers.

The newcomer in the 1980s

A newcomer to Cohasset in the 1980s faces several social choices. But beacause of the huge increase in working women many of the earlier social clubs have died.

A boat owner can join the Yacht Club or the more common Sailing Club on Government Island. Youths of families of both clubs learn to be agile sailors as they compete in races.

For a $2,000 initiation fee, one may join the Cohasset Golf Club as a regular member if the club membership accepts the application.

Some members have acknowledged they have not accepted a few other nominees over the years even if they had two members as sponsors, two more were willing to write letters of reference and the applicant was willing to pay a $35 monthly miniumum charge whether they ate at the clubhouse or not.

Recently the Golf Club has instituted a "social membership" for those wishing to play tennis. There is a $500 fee and other charges which brings the total fee close to $1,000.

The alternative to this is the Tennis and Squash Indoor Club on Cedar Street. Junior memberships for youths under 18 years old and whose parents do not play tennis are $50. Single memberships are $121 and family memberships are $137 annually, according to club members.

For those interested in horses, there is a group which meets in Wheelwright Park on North Main Street.

Some children have become experts and are spending the summer at the Riders Club Camp in Vermont.

For those literary minded college alumnae, there is always the Discussion Club where members pay only $4 annually. Members discuss books and ideas but the membership is fairly exclusive and is limited to 35 members by invitation only.

But for those who enjoy the simpler pleasures of Cohasset, there are some fees such as permit fees to park a car at Government Island or Sandy Beach and other fees for clamming, payable at Town Hall. Wheelright ark and Whitney Woods are still free to hikers.

Money ready to claim

State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane recently announced his office is attempting to return more than $4 million to 30,000 Massachusetts residents under the state's unclaimed money law.

Crane said the money has been reported to the treasury as unclaimed by insurance companies doing business within the state.

Included are unpaid life insurance benefits, unpaid benefits on health and liability insurance policies, pension checks and dustomer overpayments. Also, uncahsed state income tax refund checks and vendor checks are included in the total.

Under Massachusetts unclaimed money law (M.G.L. c 200A), accounts which have been unclaimed for at least five years are declared abandoned and must be reported to the treasury. The Treasury Dept. then tries to locate the rightful owner or legal heirs.

"Many of these accounts represent the cash value of term life insurance policies which the owners do not realize they are entitled to claim," Crane said. "My office is making every reasonable effort, as we have done in prior years, to locate the owners or legal heirs to return these funds to those who are due them."

Individual entitlements from these unclaimed accounts range from $25 to a single account worth more than $10,000. Last spring Crane released the names of 42,000 Massachusetts residents who were owed more than $17 million, most of this resulting from unclaimed savings accounts.

Persons who believe they may have a valid claim should call the Treasurer's Office at 523-1042 or Toll Free 1-800-632-8027.

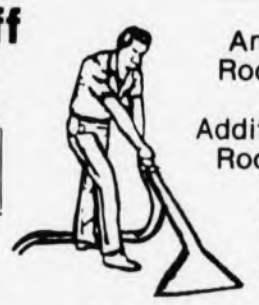
Here is the list of people living in the Cohasset-Scituate area who should call the treasurer's office:

James Anderson, Donald Carey, Howard F. Dane, Leo T. Flanagan, Caleb Jenkins, Francis T. Kelly, EST, James C. Kelly, James Mullin, E.J.M. Neil, John D. O'Brien, Coralie S. Rushforth MD, Dr. Thomas Servino, Thomas Stotler and Manuel Vincent.

Also, Joseph J. Canan, Robert S. Hawker, Robert Lamorgese, T. Profin, Richard B. Singer and Raymond Sullivan.

Art Center exhibit

The South Shore Art Center is sponsoring an exhibition of oil paintings by Michael Keane, a Pembroke artist, at the Quincy Co-operative Bank galleries, Rte. 3A, Cohasset.



Keane is a representational artist whose subjects literally surround him. The pond behind his home, nearby marshes and his child are all included in his paintings.

Keene has been an instructor at the Braintree Arts Association, Rockland Evening Division, the Copley Society of Boston and the Ellis House Art Center in Scituate. He has won major awards in all area shows and is a member of the Scituate Front Street Gallery.

Greek Taverna

The August Greek Taverna, sponsored by the Panagia Greek Orthodox Church (Pope Memorial), 817 Jerusalem Rd., will be held Saturday, Aug. 13, from noon to 7 p.m. and Sunday, Aug. 14, from 1 to 7 p.m.

Greek foods will abound such as dolmades (stuffed grape leaves), loukoumades (deep fried fritters in honey), baklava, ravani, other home-baked pastries and, of course, moussaka, spanikopita, lamb and much, much more.

There will be Greek and American dancing throughout both days to live music provided by "Apollo" and "Kosta."

To add to the festivities there will be "Greek Fisherman Hats," cassette tapes of Greek music and Taverna T-shirts for all ages which will be sold at the Taverna's "unique boutique."

Chairmen for this event are Mrs. Eugenia Syrmopoulos of Cohasset and Mr. Paul Gianibas of Hull. Church members helping are residents of Hull, Weymouth, Duxbury, Hanover, Norwell, Marshfield, Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset.

The church wishes to thank all those people for helping to make the fourth annual July 4 weekend Greek Taverna sponsored by the church a success!

One of the highlights of the festivities was the drawing of the raffle prizes. The diamond engagement ring and matching wedding band, the handcrafted afghan, the cordless telephone, the portable television, a professional musical guitar, $100 in case, and 2,000 feet of Saran Wrap were raffled.

Gym floor bid

The Vicsons Floor Co. of Medford was awarded the contract to reconstruct the Sullivan Gym Floor at the high school. The company was the low bidder at $12,990. This action is subject to approval by the insurance adjuster.

Appointments

The School Committee appointed Paul Blanchard as coach of the boys' junior varsity soccer team. He has four years of experience coaching youth soccer.

Monday night the board also appointed Kennan Startzell as head coach of the girls' varsity soccer team. He worked two summers as a soccer instructor at a soccer camp.

There were no other applicants for either position.

Meeting

The School Committee will meet Tues., Aug. 23 at 8 p.m. to vote on the revised attendance policy.

CHS Class of '38 reunion

All the remaining members of the CHS CLass of 1938 plan to attend a 45th reunion Friday, Aug. 26 at 6 p.m. in the American Legion Hall. Mary Walsh of Fresno, California, plans to attend.

The graduating class had 25 youths. A few months ago Roy Chase of Provincetown telephoned Helen Barrow and suggested they not wait for a 50th reunion, but have a bang-up 45th. "Six of our class members have died, including two in recent months," Barrow said, "and we wanted to get together before we lost any more, so I began to organize."

Members of the reunion committee are Helen Barrow, Doris Kerr Flint, Beatrice Neagle Perry, Edward Maree, Foster Cadose, Louis Simeone and Arthur Wood. They have been meeting for months to plan the event at Flint's home.

The meal will be catered by the Strawberry Parfait and we plan to have dancing, Barrow said.

At an earlier workshop, teachers said this freedom puts them in an uncomfortable position.

If one teacher is lenient, the teacher who is strict is seen as insensitive in the students' eyes, teachers said.

"If it isn't written down, it won't be enforced across the board," English teacher Ron Emmons said at a workshop.

CORRECTIONS

Earlier the Mariner reported, "If a child misses school for an unexcused absence, he is entitled to two or more days to make up work missed." It should have said, "If a child misses school for an excused absence, he is entitled to two or more days to make up work missed."

In addition, the Mariner reported, "Written work due on a day in which the student had an excused absence may be passed in but will be marked late and marked down."

Peace in the fire house

The arrival of new management is a time of stress in any enterprise. Relationships change not only between management and labor, but also within labor as the mix of personalities gets shaken anew.

The task of new management and old labor under new management is the same: "Be not so wedded to past ways of doing things that ye be closed to new ideas!" This is obviously true of labor, but is is also true of management, for a practice that may have been productive in a tractor factory in Topeka is not necessarily what is called for in a fish & chips joint in Bar Harbor.

In short, all of us in the workplace, whatever our station, need to resist the natural tendency most of us have to fight against change.

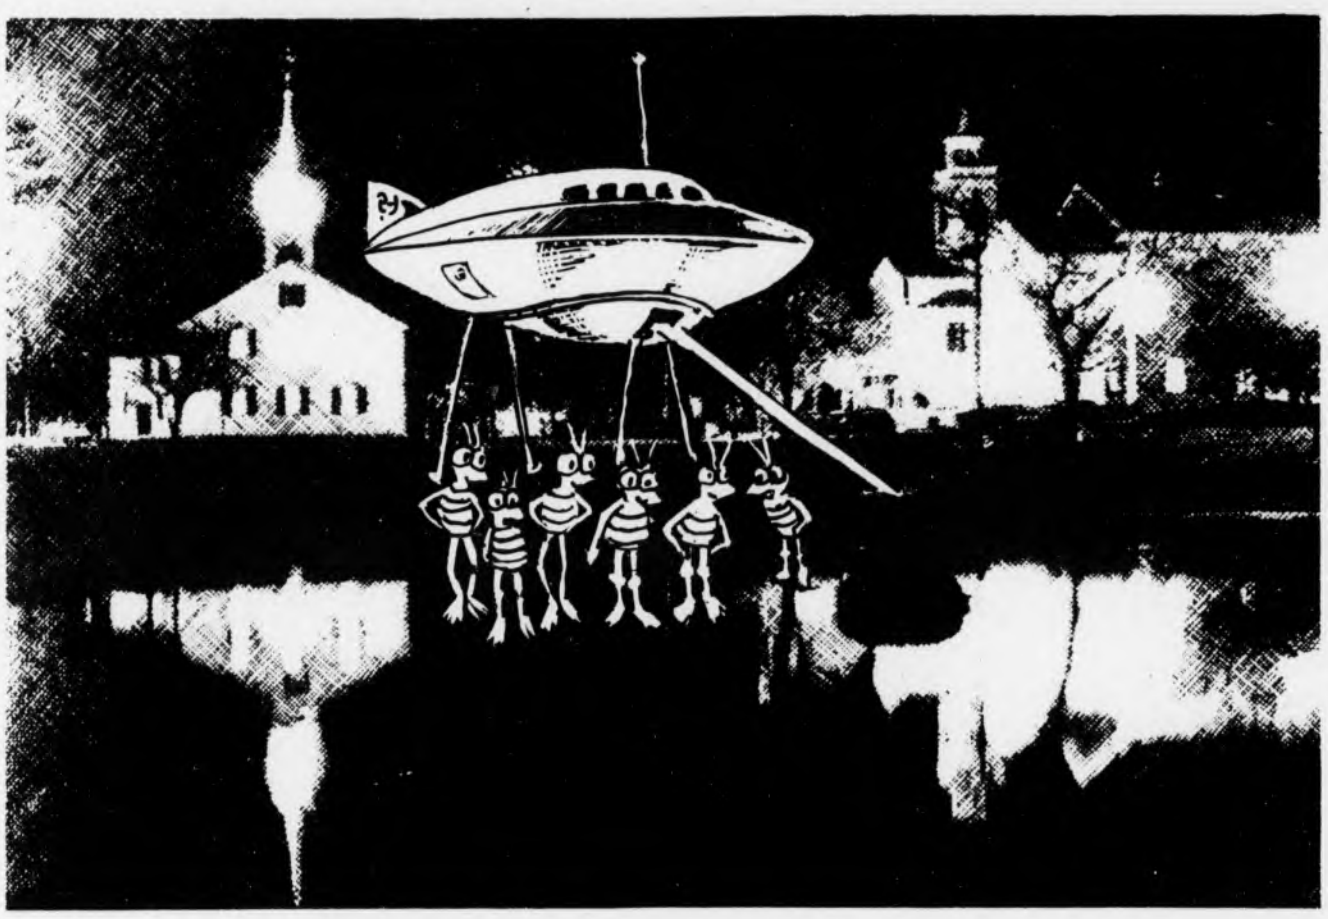
What prompts these remarks is the Cohasset Fire Department, where by all reports new Chief Martin Dooley and some of his firefighters have had some rough moments together over the last several months. We've taken the time the last few weeks to chat with a number of parties to the quarrel, and it unfortunately begins to sound like what pa used to call a "spitting contest" when the parson was around...and something slightly stronger when he wasn't.

Without taking sides on the issues that divide Chief Dooley and his men, we'd like to make the following observations.

First, whether every firefighter is fond of Dooley or not is irrelevent; but it is labor's duty to carry out the legal directives of management, for management represents the town and hence us all. In the event of disagreement, firefighters should take the attitude of a grouchy teacher we once knew who responded to queries about his agreement with silly school rules by saying: "I enforce policies I don't agree with even more strictly than those I do agree with!"

Second, while Dooley has the authority to run the department subject to law and the policies set by selectmen, wisdom says that he shouldn't try to transform the Cohasset Fire Department overnight into the Hartford, Connecticut department, whence he came. He, too, should resist the tendency to resist new ideas.

Third, the counsel of Selectman John DeBassio, who is serving as an intermediary between the arties, should be taken very, very seriously. It wasn't long ago that DeBassio himself moved into town to take over a department — in his case the police department. DeBassio has his problems with his own superiors, but he had the complete loyalty of his men, and he probably knows better than anyone what a new chief and a veteran department need to do to get along.



Fourth, Captains Roger Lincoln and Richard Conley owe it to the town, to Chief Dooley and to themselves, to see to it that in the sensitive situation that now exists they solve problems for their new chief, not make them.

Lincoln, of course, had the first offer from selectmen to be chief after an extraordinary vote last year at Special Town Meeting making him eligible. He chose to turn the offer down, and having done so he owes Martin Dooley his complete cooperation...forever.

The same is true of Dick Conley who as the respected Chairman of the School Committee is himself a "town father." Positive leadership by these two individuals within the department can go a long way toward solving the problems that have arisen.

Resolution of those problems really require only that those whose profession it is to save lives act in the

Troubled adolescents form state services gap

By Patricia Desmond

The state's system of children's services has a gap when it comes to helping troubled adolescents.

This is the bottom line of the 1983 needs assessment developed by the Coastline Council for Children.

The words are dry in the simple 18 page report. They sum up a year's worth of work in behalf of some children who were not served as well as the child advocate, Marsha Lerner-Holbrook, would have liked.

The words talk about budget cuts and other statistics. The state agencies in this area are trying to do everything possible to address the problem. "It's a long standing problem. It will take citizen commitment and state funds," Mary Thomas, the Council's Community Representative said.

The paid staff of the council includes Lerner-Holbrook, Thomas and a secretary. They work out of an office in a church building in Braintree.

The task is to advocate for children, monitor children's services and regulate their quality. They are there for children and families who need help and are not getting it or aren't getting as much help as they think they need. These are the families that would otherwise slip through the cracks.

Think about the stress that a seven year-old must feel before acting out a suicidal impulse. What about an 11 year-old who must be watched constantly to be protected from a death wish?

"The age of children needing hospitalization for mental health problems seems to be lower," Lerner-Holbrook said.

Does that mean these children are dangerous either to themselves or others?

"In some cases, the 13 to 17 year olds make up the largest number of children in this region. They also are the ones seeking help in the greatest number."

In the seven town region where the council operates — Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell, Scituate, Hull, Braintree and Weymouth — in the time from July, 1982 to March, 1983, 36 children who needed mental health or mental retardation services didn't get them from the state agency set up to provide them. Some went unserved. More found help, through the child advocate, from other agencies.

"In addition there are approximately 40 adolescents currently treated for mental health problems in Coastline's Aftercare programs who have been identified as needing residential placement," the assessment states.

Direct services are not provided to the people calling the Council office. People are referred to say the Department of Social Services, Department of Mental Health, or a hospital or other agency — and if the appropriate service is denied, the role of advocate comes out of the shadows.

The report clearly identifies the biggest gap. It sounds like Catch 22.

"The major difficulties in serving adolescents in need stem from gaps in mental health services.

"Currently that fact that a child is eligible for Chapter 766 services precludes access to most Department of Mental Health funds for residential care. This policy applies even in cases where a Department of Education Appeal has ruled that local schools are not responsible for such care.

"It is unclear who is responsible for mentally retarded and mentally/emotionally disturbed children in need of residential services.

"As a result of unclear agency responsibility, parents and children often drift from one agency to another seeking assistance they need so desperately."

The report goes on to say that in the past these gaps were filled but because money is tight everywhere when the existing programs are filled, children go unserved.

Another problem is the lack of suitable foster homes for adolescents. Not one new adolescent foster home was found in the area in the past year.

Talking about the problems of what seems to be an increasingly troubled group of adolescents, Lerner-Holbrook is relucant to generalize.

The people at the agency don't actually know why there are more children in distress. They say they can only speculate.

Lerner-Holbrook described the case of a suicidal child who needed immediate hospital placement. The child already had a social worker. Several hours of calling hospitals produced no available bed. Secure hospital beds are hard to come by. A placement was made after many phone calls to a hospital in another part of the state.

"My job is to know where there are resources and make the connections," she explained.

Coastline Council for Children operates in large measure by volunteers working through committees. The phone number is 849-1882. Between July of last year and this March the agency provided requested information for 481 callers or about 10 a week. In that time another 148 calls ended with advocacy assistance.

A Parents Anonymous Chapter is supported through free transportation, child care and space.

The largest number of callers, incidentally, were looking for day care.

Committees of the council work in the following areas: Child Abuse and Neglect, Teenage Pregnancy Prevention, Help for Children (concentrates on the gaps), 766, Protective Services, Campership (organizes community fundraising), Community Review (monitors day care services, etc.), and proposal review (comments on programs seeking state funds to serve children).

Murray's Memos

From the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

Legislative Rules Reform Petition

Throughout these summer months, while most are thinking about sun and fun, a coalition of organizations has been hammering out an initiative petition to present to the voters to create some major reforms in the operations and rules of the Massachusetts Legislature.

What is unique about this rules reform petition is that it is sponsored by organizations reflecting the wide political spectrum, from the Republican party and Citizens for Limited Taxation to Common Cause of Massachusetts and Mass Action to CPPAX and Democrats for Rules Reform.

By law, the petition was submitted last week to the Attorney General who must determine that it does not conflict with any constitutional provisions. When approved by the AG, it then goes to the Secretary of State where the large petition papers you are often asked to sign are written and printed. By September, workers from these various organizations will be standing outside supermarkets and town dumps to collect the more than 60,000 signatures required to place the question on the 1984 ballot.

In a joint statement, the Coalition said it seeks "to restore both the principles and the practice of democracy and openness to the Massachusetts Legislature" by breaking up the "inordinate concentration of power now in the hands of the top leadership." The statement said that this is needed to insure that "all our state legislators have an opportunity to shape the laws of the Commonwealth."

Specifically the proposed statute would require:

— The democratic selection of committee chairman as well as committee members.

— Ratification of majority and minority leadership appointment in party caucus.

— A requirement that a majority of committee members sign committee reports recommending favorable action on bills.

— Roll call votes on any committee action when requested by 25 percent of committee members.

— The discharge of bills from the Ways and Means and Rules Committees upon petition of 25 percent of a chamber's members and the discharge of all bills by the Committee on Bills in Third Reading within 30 days of reciving them. These committees are traditional graveyards for bills opposed by the leadership.

— A reduction in the salary bonuses given legislative leaders and committee chairs, which the group says would bring them more into line with the salary of the rank-and-file membership.

A number of these provisions were debated on the floor of the House several months ago when the Legislature approved three changes in joint rules that were recommended by a special House-Senate committee on joint rules. But the amendments were defeated because there was concern that the Senate would reject the entire package if the House added changes on its own.

Republicans have traditionally led the battle for many of these reforms internally. It is heartening to see a coalition of such diverse philosophies agree both to the seriousness of the problem and to a solution.

PETITION INITIATED

Recently I initiated a petition which will call upon Congress to pass an amendment to the U.S. Constitution which requires a balanced federal budget. Upon adoption, this petition will then be presented to the Secretary of the U.S. Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

If at least two-thirds of all states propose and adopt a similar petition, Congress is then obliged to call a convention for the sole purpose of proposing the budget balancing amendment.

We hope to make Congress realize they must be more responsible and economical in their use of federal funds. This amendment would make a balanced budget madatory, which should help eliminate some wasteful and unnecessary expenditures.

firehouse like the big people they are once the fire alarm rings. Resolution may require Chief Dooley to defer some of his reforms for long enough to sell them to the men he expects to implement them. It may require Captains Lincoln and Conley to implement some procedures that wouldn't be theirs were they the chief. It may require the rest of the department to do the same.

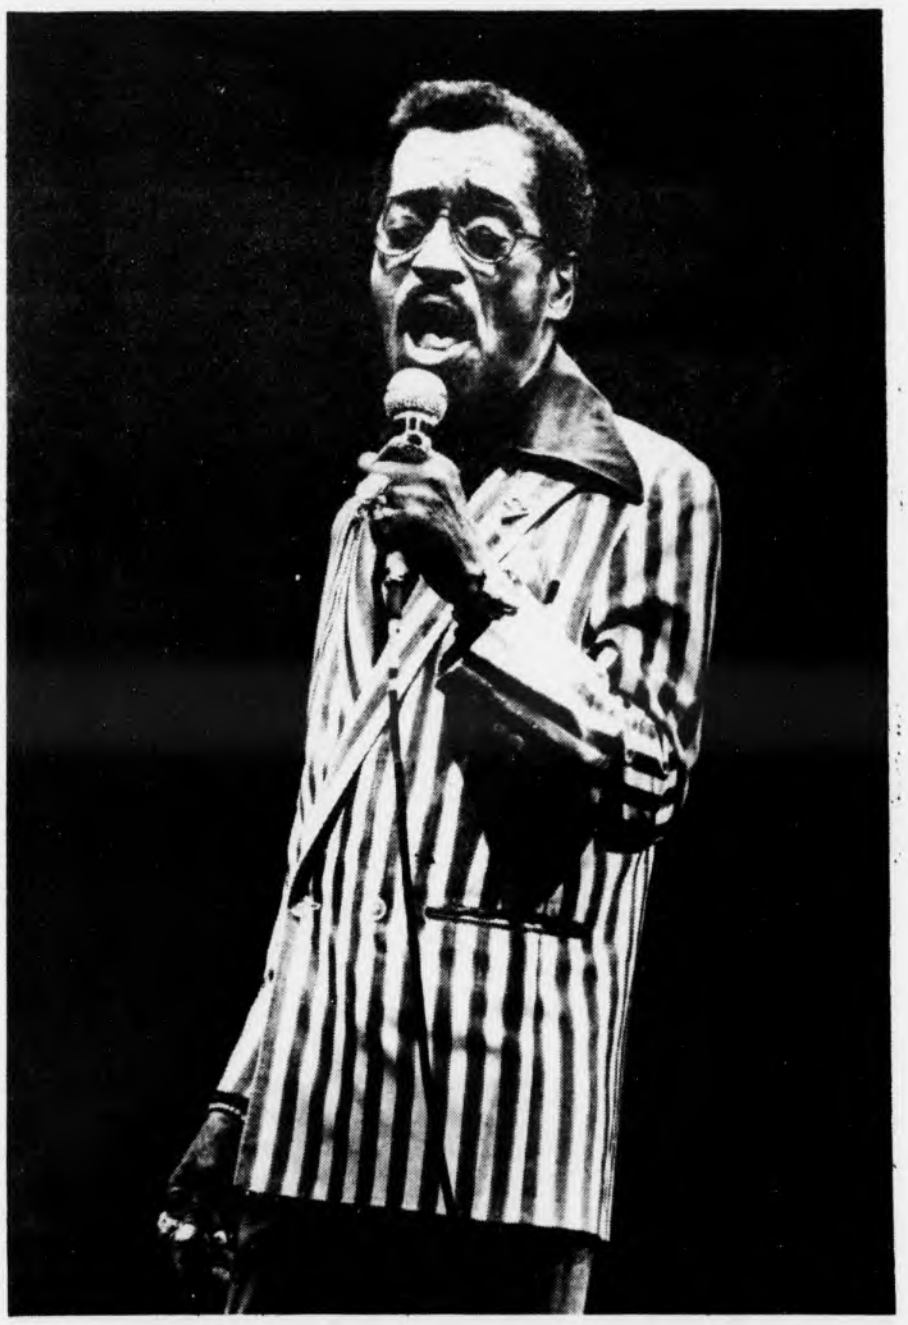
But whatever resolution of these problems requires, the public interest demands it, for the price of delay is risk to life and limb.

Tri-town meeting affirms goals

Tri-town representatives from Hingham, Hull and Cohasset met Aug. 4 with State Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray to discuss mutual goals and plans at Hull Town Hall.

Attending were Selectman Edward Lewiecki of Hingham, Selectman John DeBassio from Cohasset, Selectman Nancy Burns of Hull, Finance Committee delegate Lewis Fisher from Hull, and Murray. Advisory Board and Finance Committee members from Cohasset and Hingham have not been appointed.

Murray, the originator and organizer of the tri-town meetings said she will appoint Hull school committeeman Charles Brennan to be a liaison for her office.



A chairman of the Tritown Committee has not yet been appointed, since two members have yet to be named.

Murray suggested Brennan be named chairman, because those members attending seem reluctant to take on added permanent responsibility. But Fisher objected.

The committee affirmed that solid waste disposal and transportation were there two chief goals.

They plan to name two citizens from each town to a tritown solid waste committee to study regional disposal responsibilities with specific objectives and a time schedule.

Art Center workshops

Introductory Drawing, a workshop designed for the beginning artist, is scheduled at the South Shore Art Center, August 15 through August 19.

Taught by David Tandy, the intensive workshop is designed for those artists wishing a fundamental grounding in drawing skills, starting with mind-to-eye-to-hand coordination of motor skills and progressing to relationships of space, line and depth.

The workshop will be held in the Center's studio, 103 Ripley Road. Advanced registration is required and may be made by calling the Center, 383-9548.

Meeting from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Tandy will explore how and why to use line and mass in relation to a two-dimensional surface. He also teaches at Mass College of Art Continuing Education and Mt. Ida Junior College.

Tandy has an MFS from Mass College and an MA from Chelsea School of Art in London. He exhibits both in Boston and in England.

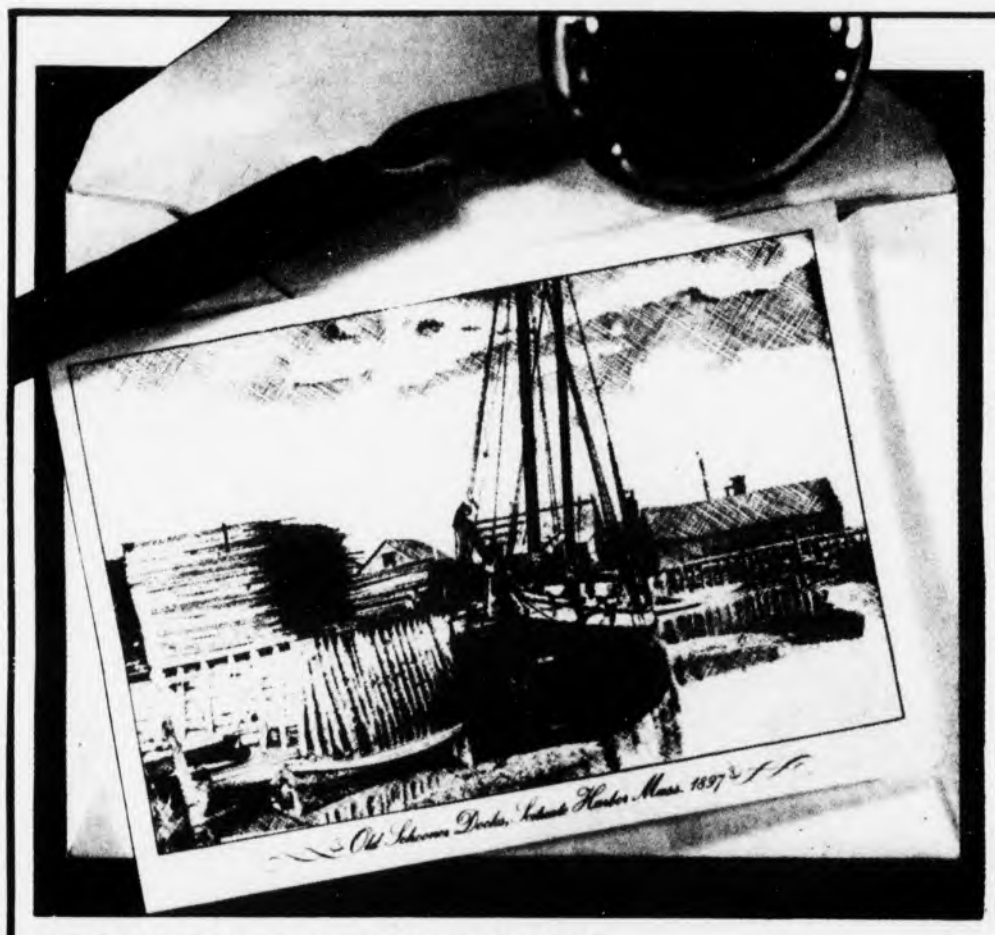
Boston artist Betty Kohlbert, who has the distinction of being the first artist selected to participate in a unique new program between the Museum of Fine Arts and the corporate sector, will teach a week-long South Shore Art Center intensive workshop.

Outdoor Painting, a technique synonomous with her name, will run Aug. 29 through Sept. 2 from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. with a shorter session Friday, Sept. 2. This workshop was originally scheduled for Aug. 22 to Aug. 26 but has been delayed a week.

Working on location and in the Center's studio at 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset, students will work in various media—watercolor, pastels, conte & graphite, collage, acrylic and oil.

Emphasis will be mastering the skills involved in creating successful work. Advanced registration is required for this workshop and may be made by calling the Center at 383-9548.

Kohlberg's abstract piece, "Siesta Key," part of her 1982 Florida series, has been the first piece selected by Kenworth Moffett, curator of Twentieth Century Art at the Museum of Fine Arts, for a joint venture between the museum and Hines Industrial, an investment development firm headquartered in Texas. Working with Moffett, Hines Industrial will assemble a collection of work by local, national and international 20th century artist and display them for five years in the lobby of Hines; new office complex at University Place in Cambridge.



At the end of five years, the works will be offered to the Museum for its permanent collection. Kohlberg's piece has been the first selected for this joint venture.

This piece, as with most of Kohlberg's work, is a large abstract created outdoors and using the environment. Her studio has become the outdoors and her "Florida Series" was created during a trip to the Florida Keys.

For more information on this intensive workshop and other Center programs, call the South Shore Art Center at 383-9548.

"Children have no political clout," Tony King, chairperson of the local council said.

"There's no one to lobby for children's issues if adults won't."

He went on to praise Phil Johnston, director of Human Services, for his attempts.

"But the budget doesn't have anything in it for new programs," King said.

What can people who want to help do?

"Join the Council. Become active." Thomas said.

Getting a 'C' in penmanship . . .

By Lois Martin

It's been a problem all my life. And though I've tried brushing it aside as being unimportant, no one else shares that magnanimous view.

It's about my handwriting, the bane of my existence, penmanship, your basic cursive. I don't do it right. It was Sybil Gordon, my second grade teacher, who first nailed me for this failing. In retrospect I find her to have been an optimist.

A lesser woman would have given up; not Mrs. Gordon. She gave me a dratted 'C.' C, mind you, in penmanship, just because my letters on those fat lines weren't legible.

I come from a family, so many of us do, who took great pride in its penmanship. A letter from Thomas Varney, my grandfather, would be an epistle worthy of framing regardless of content, simply because of its rich, lavish handwriting.

And you could read it. That's essentially the problem with my script. I'm the only one who can read it. And it's caused problems which have brought out the worst in people, inspiring them to the most candid of insults conceivable in describing my writing. "Hen scratching," they've said is far too complimentary to be accurate.

The thing is, I'm a very natural person. And my penmanship is naturally atrocious. I've friends who are teachers. There have been moments when one of them has patiently, too patiently, handed me a pencil and a piece of paper and instructed me kindly to write my little name very slowly.

I longed for the recess bell, scribbled my name in a quarter second and failed to please again.

Doctors, you know, write that way on purpose on those prescriptions. I'll bet some of them can approach calligraphy skills if they'd let themselves go. But they have an image to uphold, white coat, stethoscope peeping out of a pocket and a prescription that's known only to them and pharmacists who probably have entire semesters dedicated to physician's handwriting.

For one thing I hold the pencil wrong, though I don't do pencils now, I'm strictly into pens. Who needs to erase, after all?

Many a wintry night I was implored by hopeful people to start again, don't overlap the thumb on the index finger, stop the death clutch on the writing tool. Boring and fruitless.

I'm interested in recording as many thoughts, comments, observations in my little notebook as possible. That's speed, not precision. And I can read it. That's the goal, after all. Furthermore, because of my cursed cursive, I can read the lousiest penmanship in the world.

What really ticks off other people is that they can't.

Anyone sitting near me who was stumped on a test was sorely disheartened if he made an effort for the answer to #19. It was actually Dr. Wenz, a brutal English professor, who finally put my mind at rest about abominable penmanship.

His was atrocious. While the rest of the class timidly asked interpretation of what he'd written on the board, I was smug. He told them loftily that he'd been plagued by his skillless script all his life until one of his instructors told him it was possibly a mark of genius. Erueka, the excuse he'd been looking for, a raison d'etre for being illegible.

I've tried to do better. People in the office for whom I've written notes have tactfully suggested I go back to printing, though they can't be certain I've left it. I use a short hand, that's shorthand, combined with personalized penmanship. Throw a dot over a word if there's an "i" or a "j" in it, a cross somewhere to indicate the presence of a "t." And you've got it made, communication.

I'm still freshly impressed each time I see proper handwriting. For me, it's like a dancing or singing skill, either of which would be easier for me.

And to commit myself to improvement I've pledged not to write to people anymore. I type to them. Those who'd heard from me in the past said they were happy to, but they had no idea what I'd said.

Somewhere latent in its hiding place must be a couple of my grandfather's genes, those highly touted penmanship skills I've never employed. I'll have a go at calling them up through my obstreperous uncursive fingers.

Trouble is, Gramp was also an avid cigar smoker. So I'm likely to end up with a Muriel, thumb overlapping the index finger. I won't give up till I see how it writes.

Bond sale

A bond sale scheduled by the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency (MHFA) to provide low-interest mortgage funds for first time homebuyers will be held Aug. 11. The interest rate on the mortgage funds and the names of lenders through which funds will be available will also be publicized by the MHFA on that date.

Groundwater atlas

Responding to the urgent need of protecting one of our most vital resources — water — the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) is distributing a groundwater atlas that covers the land area of a municipality to every community in the state.

In Massachusetts groundwater is primarily of drinking quality but reserves are being threatened by a variety of possible contaminating sources. These include improperly designed and operated landfills, hazardous waste dumps, underground fuel storage, surface waste impoundments, and farm runoff.

To date, some 42 public, private and industrial water supplies have been closed due to contamination.

A Beautiful Approach to Country Living.

You drive in through meadows strewn with seasonal wildflowers. But that's only your entry to the good life at The Meadows, The Green Company's new community of attached single family homes in Hingham. The architectural style is true to the farm-house heritage of the community. The construction and detailing have been accomplished with obvious pride.

The Meadows offers a selection of two and three bedroom homes with unexpected details like master suites with private fireplaced sitting areas, large country kitchens for informal entertaining, separate dining rooms for more formal occasions, hidden corners for quiet contemplation, and a mix of ceiling heights and styles. In addition there are large private courtyards, two-car garages, full basements, a swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. And best of all, this very civilized lifestyle is near major highways to the cultural delights of Boston and vacation areas to the North and South.

Prices range from $157,000 to $210,000 during this, our opening period. Furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street, one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment. When it comes to a good life in the country, The Meadows leads the field!

Water Dept. to test sewer effluent

In an effort to save expensive outside laboratory testing costs, sewer commissioners requested permission to use the Water Department lab for tests of the sewer plant effluent. These tests are required by the State Dept. of Quality Engineering (DEQE).

July 6, the Water Commissioners voted not to allow this request, and informed Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis in a letter dated July 19.

"It is not in the best interest of our lab environment to have sewage samples analyzed in the same facility as the drinking water," wrote Water Superintendent Benjamin Curley.

At a July 26 meeting, the sewer commissioners decided to continue using commercial labs to do their efficiency analyses.

from the kitchen

Joan Pinkham

By Joan Pinkham

This has been a long, hot summer, with the kitchen to be avoided at all costs. Few want to do more than snack and, certainly, no one wants to be within 10 feet of a hot oven. But what a change when the east wind blows in off the water! Hopefully you've laid in a supply of stone ground corn meal from the little grist mill operated by the Scituate Historical Society. It won't open again until Sept. 11, but Kathleen Laidlaw, the president, keeps a supply on hand at her home and you might want to give her a call so you'll have the makings for these delicious

CORN MEAL PANCAKES

1 c. flour
1 c. corn meal
4 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. salt
2 eggs, beaten
1¾ c. milk
2 T melted butter

Sift flour with corn meal, baking powder and salt. Combine eggs, milk and butter. Pour into dry ingredients. Stir gently until well mixed. Bake on ungreased griddle over medium heat about one minute on each side. Dress up with cranberry sauce, with fried sausage cake topped with another pancake. Let a pat of butter melt over all and pass the syrup!

When the phone rings to announce company is on the way, it's usually around meal time and if your cupboard is bare, Marion Balboni has this summery, cool dessert that's quick and easy to prepare.

CHOCO-NUT ICE CREAM SHELLS

2 c. semi-sweet chocolate bits
1/4 c. butter or margarine
1/4 c. cream
1/2 c. cocoa krispies cereal

Combine all but the cereal in top of double boiler and stir over hot water until melted and well mixed. Remove. Add cereal and mix. Quickly press mixture around sides and bottom of muffin papers. Freeze. Remove papers. Fill with ice cream.

One reader is looking for recipes for meals to prepare on their camping trip. Betty Compton is faced with ths task of feeding a family of four, hungrier than ever from just being outdoors and cooking on their two-burner stove in their trailer is somewhat of a challenge, particularly when you care enough to want to have nutritional, well-balanced meals. When we had our boat and I was cooking on two-burners, I sent away to Campbell Soup Company for their booklet called "The Cooking Camper" and one of the dishes we enjoyed was called

RANGER'S RICE WITH BEEF

1 lb. ground beef
1/2 c. chopped green pepper
1/2 c. chopped onion
1 large clove garlic, minced
1 can Campbell's Tomato Soup
1½ c. water
1½ c. quick-cooking rice, uncooked
1 T Worcestershire
1/2 tsp. salt and dash of pepper

In skillet, cook first four ingredients. Stir to separate meat. Add remaining ingredients. bring to a boil; reduce heat. Cover; cook 10 min., or until liquid is absorbed. Stir occasionally. Makes 5 cups.

Another dish that can be enjoyed on land or sea is perfect for this time of year when our gardens have eggplant ripening on the vine. Just to write of it makes my mouth water for

EGGPLANT NAPOLI

1/2 c. chopped onion
2 T peanut oil
1 can (10½ oz.) tomato puree
2/3 c. water
1 tsp. oregano leaves
1½ tsp. salt, dash pepper

Cohasset Savings Bank helps Voke computer crunch

By Moira McCarthy

South Shore Vocational Technical High School has turned to the business community to help them overcome the restraints of Proposition 2 1/2, and Cohasett Savings Bank is one of the first to help.

Cohasset Savings Bank donated somewhere in the area of $40,000 worth of computer equipment to the school recently.

"We want our students to graduate to be computer literate to the largest capacity. What Cohasset Savings bank has done is to help us achieve that goal. And in that we are helping them by training future employees the right way. We only hope other businesses will follow suit," Silvia said.

"Cohasset Savings has performed a real community service," said Richard Silvia, Cohasset representative and chairman of the South Shore Vocational Technical High School.

Ozzie Ingram (left) and Richard Silvia, (right) both of Cohasset, look over the Burroughs computer for South Shore Vocational Technical School.

""What they have done is typical of the things that can be done to make education work."

The bank donated five Burroughs computer systems, which were recently replaced by an updated model in the bank.

The computers are accounting terminals, and hook up to a main terminal in Boston.

"These computers are still usable," Bank president Osborne F. Ingram said. "Our bank has just outgrown the system."

"We could have continued to use these, but we have to stay with the times in the business," bank vice-president Robert Magner added.

Silvia said that the computers will be used mainly in a newly implemented course in marketing and management. "With these we will be able to train people in management, and give them a mini-banking course as well," he said.

"But these are not limited to banking, " he added. "We plan on using them for general use. Students can work on them to learn repair and maintenence."

Silvia also said that the donation is two-fold, because Vo Tech will be training students who may work in Cohasset Savings Bank.

Ingram agreed, saying that the turnover in banking employees is rapid, because they move up so quickly.

The school already has some Apple computers, but Silvia said that adding the Burroughs equipment will make a substantial difference.

Phone strike

The national strike by communications workers for three unions affected Cohasset this week along with the rest of the nation.

Telephone calls requiring operator assistance for credit cards,person to person or collect were "backed up." And getting information for assistance wasn't easy either.

Carolyn McKeon, public relations manager for the area, said this week's strike was the first major national one for the telephone company since 1968.

Pollution prompts swimming ban in Cohasset Harbor

Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulous is still awaiting further test results of the bacteria count at the tide gates in the harbor.

At the tide gates, waste from James Brook and the sewer plant enter the ocean waters.

As a result, two signs remained posted at Fisherman's Wharf (between the Old Salt House, a park and Hugo's Lighthouse) and the floats at the head of the Cove between the "Cohasset by the Sea Motel" and the Cox Estate.

The signs read "Keep Out, Water Polluted, No Swimming per order of the Board of Health, Aug. 11, 1983." Boating is still allowed.

A news release from the Board of Health and Sewer Dept. said Government Island and the Mill River Bridge areas were opened for swimming after bacteria tests were conducted.

Both departments expect the fishermen's dock and the Margin Street float will be opened soon.

Tuesday morning , Rusty Iwanowicz of the state Division of the Marine Fisheries dissolved oxygen on the bottom and surface of lobster cars in Cohasset Harbor.

He reported the sewage and high "bug counts" do not affect lobsters.

With the close proximity of fresh water inflow, the 27 percent salinity is normal. "These test results should not cause undue stress on lobsters, Iwanowicz said.

Sunday afternoon, over 50 youths were seen diving off the bridge between Hugos and Government Island on Border Street after the sign at Government Island had been removed. The sign was posted Thursday.

Test results Saturday showed only the tidal gate area was in excess of the bacteria count limit for swimming.

Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild said Friday the 35,000 gallons of sewage dumped after only two hours of chlorination was a result of routine cleaning and repairs which occur every two years.

He acknowledged it might have been better if the commisioners had given advance notice to the public.

In hindsight Sewer Commision Chairman Charles DeSantis agreed with Guild but also acknowledged he

Min. value—$50,000 under revaluation

By Patricia Anne Walsh

There is a strong likelihood that almost all homes in Cohasset will be valued for more than $50,000 when the 100 percent revaluation is completed.

This was confirmed by Assessor Chairman Brian Wilkin during a recent interview.

"There may be a few houses but they will be darn few, valued at less than $50,000. Just look at the real estate section advertisement. Houses on Hull and Stockbridge Streets are selling for more than $50,000," he added.

Wilkin said the reassessment is 75 to 80 percent complete and most of the data collection is finished.

"They are starting to work on values and hope to be ready with figures by mid-September. Then we will have to get preliminary approval from the state. When we have that, we can send out impact notices of the new values to the property owners," Wilkin said.

He expects the impact notices may be sent out in September.

The firm conducting the revaluation for the town is Appraisal Consultants of New England. The firm will be paid $116,800 and is expected to hold hearings for owners who are dissatisfied with their new assessments.

Wilkin, Town Accountant William Signorelli and Treasurer-Collector Gordon Flint agree the new tax rate will probably be less than $25 per thousand of assess value. Flint predicts the rate will be nearer to $23.

Flint says he will probably start borrowing money to operate town expenses betweeen Sept. 20 and Sept. 25.

The state allowed the town to increase its budget since revaluation was not completed. Homeowners were sent bills based on past assessments, building permits and the 2½ percent increase allowed under Propositon 2½.

Fire Department still heated up

The internal disputes between Fire Chief Martin Dooley and firefighters are now serious.

Three weeks ago Dooley said four to six men are upset with his management practices.

Now the number ballooned to 18 firefighters including four officers.

Cohasset Permanent Firefighters Local 2804, AFL-CIO presented selectmen last week with a "Resolution of No Confidence," which essentially expresses dissatisfaction with Dooley's administrative practices.

In addition the union filed eight grievances which the selectmen will hear at 8 p.m. Thursday. Dooley has rejected all the grievances and will give his reasons to selectmen at the hearing.

The complaints are:

The town didn't issue two firefighters clothing allowances which are equal to one percent of base pay.

Firefighter James Runey did not receive three days pay at the acting captain rate.

Dooley created unnecessary overtime for the department's fire prevention officer.

Runey was asked to provide a medical certificate from his doctor to prove he was ill and previously no certificate was required.

Dooley failed to negotiate with the union about a new

Lacerates Studds:'He's not for us'

Conway will not run

Despite a pledge to support any candidate who will oppose Congressman Gerry Studds, South Shore businessman Jack Conway refused to toss his hat into the political arena in 1984.

Conway, who opposed the incumbent in last year's 10th Congressional District race, emphasized his strong opposition to Studds, saying, "he is not right for this district. Mr. Studds does not understand the economic values and economic needs of this district. Nor does he understand the family values of this district."

A longtime Cohasset resident, Conway noted that although he was " privy to information recently admitted by Mr. Studds, at that time in my campaign, I did not care to make that an issue. I didn't think it was a proper thing to do."

According to the real estate tycoon, the recent admission by Studds of a homosexual affair with a U.S. Capital page " is a situation I find entirely reprehensible. And, I am very discouraged that the Congressman from a district representing 522,000 people, would accept the responsibility of pandering with a youngster."

He continued, " I am disappointed that Mr. Studds did not resign from public office. He should have - if he has any feeling for the people of this district.

However, it appears he shall seek re-election. That has been made clear to me after this week-

Gov't 'island parking

Selectmen referred the issue of Hugo's Restaurant using the Gov't Island Wharf parking lot to town counsel.

If town counsel approves the proposal, overflow traffic, which now parks on Border St., will be able to park at Gov't Island. In addition, anyone with a Gov't Island beach sticker will be able to park there.

Executive secretary Mark Lanza said that the change would not be put into effect for at least a year.

A year allows enough time to resurface the Gov't Island parking lot but the restaurant probably will not pay for the resurfacing. Hugo's has agreed to finance lighting the parking lot.

Special town meeting

The special town meeting is rescheduled for Tuesday, Sept. 20 at 7:30 p.m.

In order to give people as much time as possible for closing of the warrants the date will be Monday, Aug. 22 at 4:30 p.m.

Electronic gear recovered

A strange buoy covered with sophisticated radio and electronic gear was towed into Cohasset Monday by lobsterman Peter Hut of Pleasant Street and Robert Healy of Cushing Road.

Healey says they called the address tagged on the fluorescent orange buoy and also called a professor in Portland, Maine. The professor said experimental apparatus was being tested for 12 hours, but the buoy had broken loose and its radio batteries stopped broadcasting after seven hours.

The buoy had been missing from Maine for eight days, when sighted by the lobstermen.

Police candidate

Selectmen announced that the only qualified candidate for full-time permanent sergeant is Robert Jackson.

Straits Pond meeting

The Board of Health is calling a meeting Thursday, Aug. 25 at 7 p.m. at 43 Elm Street to discuss the recent problems regarding Straits Pond. An official from the State Reclamation Board will attend to discuss possible ways in which to minimize future odor problems. The board also hopes DEQE biochemist, Lenore Valutkevich, will attend to provide technical background on the problem.

Swim Center Closed

The Cohasset Swim Center will remain closed until a temporary pump is found. Erin O'Brien of the Swim Center said a new pump was found to be too big for the system. She does not know when the center will reopen. For further information, please call 383-9463. Red Cross lessons will resume Wednesday at Sandy Beach.

Shooting case continues

The Norfolk County District Attorney's office is still continuing to investigate the shooting of a Cohasset woman Memorial Day. There are some new developments though. Judith Stover, 38, who was found unconscious in her Beechwood Street home, has regained consciousness and has been transferred to a rehabilitation center. Since the incident, no charges were filed. Asst. D.A. Peter Casey said Mrs. Stover will be questioned but the first priority taken into consideration is her health.

Selectmen vote to retain Laugelle

Selectmen did not recommend the termination of Landfill supervisor Joe "Skinny Laugelle."

This decision will be referred to the Board of Health. Earlier the board voted to terminate Laugelle.

Selectmen's decision was made within 10 days after an open hearing attended by 250 residents. At the hearing many witnesses supported Laugelle and a petition, signed by 1,100 residents was presented in favor of Laugelle.

After the health board receives the selectmens recommendation they will either accept the decision or may go to the Personnel Board for the third step of the revised town personnel grievance bylaw.

Each selectman gave his own reasons for rejecting Laugelle's termination. Selectman chairman Mary Jane McArthur was absent and Selectman Rocco Laugelle, Joe's brother, abstained from discussion.

Selectman Frank England said, "The Board of Health did not make a reasonable effort to help maintain (Laugelle's) job performance level. They did not set reasonable and attainable levels for his job."

Selectman John DeBassio said, "there should be certain administrative procedures taken when there is an employee position in question, such as: warning the employee or writing a reprimand before filing for termination."

DeBassio said oral warnings during a public health board meeting were not the appropriate way to approach Laugelle with any job dissatisfaction."

Selectman Cliff Mitman, who agreed with DeBassio added, "Before the Board of Health can blame Laugelle about drainage or quality of filling problems, the board has planning to do on its own."

The selectmen's recommendation also said Laugelle, Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos, and the health board should keep communication lines open in the future.

had known about the necessary maintenance in March.

DeSantis and Sewer Plant Supervisor Manny Salvador stressed they did not feel the lobsters stores in cars, farther out than the tidal gate area, were affected.

Salvador is a third generation lobsterman, who started lobstering 50 years ago (six years old) with his grandfather.

DeSantis said the work on the plant was "necessary corrective and preventative maintenance."

Salvador said this was the first time the water in the immediate area of the tidal gates had been tested. He believes onshore winds and currents may be the cause of the unverified test results.

Jessie Cox Trust

(Ed. Note: Here is the official release of the Jessie Cox Charitable Trust.)

A major new member of the Philanthropic Community, the Jessie B. Cox Charitable Trust, is accepting applications for $2.5 million annually in funding for programs in education, the environment and health.

Non-profit agencies throughout the northeast may apply by writing the Trust's administrators, Grant Management Associates, care of Powers and Hall, 100 Franklin Street, Boston, MA 02110.

Applicants are encouraged to submit an initial concept paper or three copies of a full proposal.

Grants will be made on a quarterly basis by the designated trustees in Boston. Proposal deadlines are Oct. 31, Jan. 31, April 30, and July 31 for meetings in December, March, June and September.

Applicants are advised to examine the Trust's guidelines and policies before applying. Guidelines will be available for review at Associated Grantmakers of Massachusetts, 294 Washington Street, Suite 501, Boston, 02108.

The purpose of the trust is to increase the ability of organizations to carry out their stated missions in areas of interest to the trustees.

These are programs exploring new approaches and providing increased access to education; protecting and enhancing the region's resources; and improving its level of health.

The trustees are committed to assisting the region's underserved populations, including support for programs which are likely to have a significant impact in both rural and urban areas.

Application may be made for funding under the Cox Development Program or the Cox New Initiatives Program. The Development Program provides major grants for one-year support, or over a two- to five- year period. The New Initiatives Program provides one-time grants.

Grants under the Cox Development Program will be made to charitable organizations judged to be in a position to experience growth in current programs.

Funds for the launching of new projects will be provided to effect change within the agency, a field of service, or a geographic area. The New Initiatives Program will provide funds for immediate purposes, where there is a special urgency, or where timely support may bring quick resolution to a particular problem.

Jessie B. Cox of Cohasset, who died in 1982, was noted for her philanthropy. She established the Jessie B. Cox Charitable Trust to continue that tradition following her death.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza has been through the problems of reassessment five times during past work experiences. He will recommend to selectmen that the town send out tax bills at the end of September based on estimates from the previous revaluation.

March 31, taxpayers could then be billed for actual values based on new assessments, Lanza said. This plan will require permission from the state and require running two different computer programs for the tax bills.

However, Wilkin said he believes the decision on whether to send out estimated or actual tax bills sometime this fall "lies within the purview of the assessors."

Hull recently reassessed but found the demand for hearings more than what officials expected. Instead of delegating two weeks for hearings, assessors had to extend their hearings for an extra two weeks when 500 owners requested to be heard.

Hull Treasurer-Collector Caroline McNeil had to pay interest on borrowed money to run the town for those two weeks and acknowledged the town may have lost even more money since the collections were late.

If collections were on time, she would have been able to invest the money at a high rate of interest.

In a report to assessors and selectmen, Appraisal Consultants submitted a progress report of the percentage of completion.

The report says residential measure and list, 84 percent, commercial measure and list, 100 percent, industrial measure and list, 100 percent, personal property, 100 percent, photographs, 80 percent and preparation for pricing, 90 percent.

However, the report also said review residential and vacant parcels was only 25 percent complete and reviews of commerical and industrial properties were only 20 percent completed.

Fifty-eight thousand, 552 dollars has been paid to the assessing firm and the company billed an additional payment of $13, 665.

end's meeting he held in Hyannis where he was quoted as saying, 'you're going to see a lot more of me from here on.' I campaigned against the man for 10 months last year, not because I wanted to be a Congressman, but because I did not want Mr Studds to be in Congress."

The decision not to wage a campaign for the U.S. Congress was made earlier than expected by Conway. He had been asked by the Cohasset Republican Committee if he would submit his name for nomination by the Southeastern Massachusetts Republican Caucus. Although he originally proposed to make public his political future by January, the committee's request hastened that decision.

Conway added that since Studds' admission of his homosexual affair in 1973, " he has already begun to dig his own Hiroshima."

The South Shore businessman said he would "robustly try to seek a respectable candidate to oppose Mr. Studds." By announcing now his decision not to enter next year's Congressional race, Conway determined other qualified candidates could gain a headstart on constructing a solid campaign.

He added he would "work assiduously and support financially " a candidate he feels " is honest, has an honest reputation and has a feeling for the family ethic."

Conway said, "Mr. Studds is not us. He is not the 522,000 people in this district. He is foreign to our ethics."

He did not comment when asked whether this decision not to enter the Congressional race would preclude any future political ambitions. Although he ran for Scituate assessor 25 years ago, last year's election against Studds was his first attempt at a major political office.

mutual aid agreeement with Hull. This agreement calls for Cohasset to send firefighters to cover a Hull station.

A new style of cap was purchased for firefighters without bargaining for a change in the working dress code.

The last grievance is union members have to request changes in work hours in writing at least 72 hours before the change.

Resolution

The resolution was signed by 18 firefighters. With the new addition of firefighter Peter Trask (brother of Capt. Mark Trask), the department has 24 men.

The resolution began by saying the below signed permanent firefighters represent a substantial majority of firefighters of the town excluding probationary firefighters.

It continued, "Whereas the morale of said firefighters is at an all time low and whereas the primary cause for said condition, in the opinion of the undersigned, is the conduct of the Chief of the Department particulary as he is the person holding the principal responsiblity for the effective and efficient operation of said Deparrtment.

"It is therefore duly resolved, that the Cohasset Permanent Firefighters Local 2804, AFL-CIO and the below signed members thereof do express their vote of no confidence in the chief of the Cohasset Fire Department, Martin W. Dooley."

Signing the resolution were William Protulis, union president, Edward Struzik, James Runey, Acting Capt. Richard Conley, Capt. Roger Lincoln, John Sullivan, James Fiori, William Litchfield, Linwood Davis, Capt. Mark Trask, John Boswell, Randall Rosano, Mathew Marr, Edward Corbo, Robert Silvia, Thomas Finegan, Paul McGaffigan and Captain James Lee Gurry.

After the petition was presented, resident Fred Johansen said, "The vote of no confidence about the whole Fire Dept. situation comes from the public because many feel uncomfortable with what is going on. I'm hearing concerns about what is fair to the chief, the selectmen and the union, tonight. What is fair to the public?"

Selectman John DeBassio chosen by selectmen to investigate the internal problems of the department said he will soon report his recommendations to the board. But he was not ready Aug. 9 to make his report.

Acting captain appt.

Selectmen postponed a request by Dooley to appoint a temporary captain while Conley remains on sick leave. Conley is expected to tell Executive Secreatary Mark Lanza when he is expected to return to duty.

Dooley said, "I have a captain on sick leave and I need to fill the position. I would like to go through the list of firefighters in order of seniority to find anyone interested in temporarily being captain."

He added firefighters have no way of guaranteeing pay for an acting captain.

Dooley said Edward Barrow and Linwood Davis declined the position.

Runey said, "It hasn't been necessary in the past to fill an officer's position when he is out."

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said, "If we appoint someone as captain until the acting captain returns than he certainly should be paid for it."

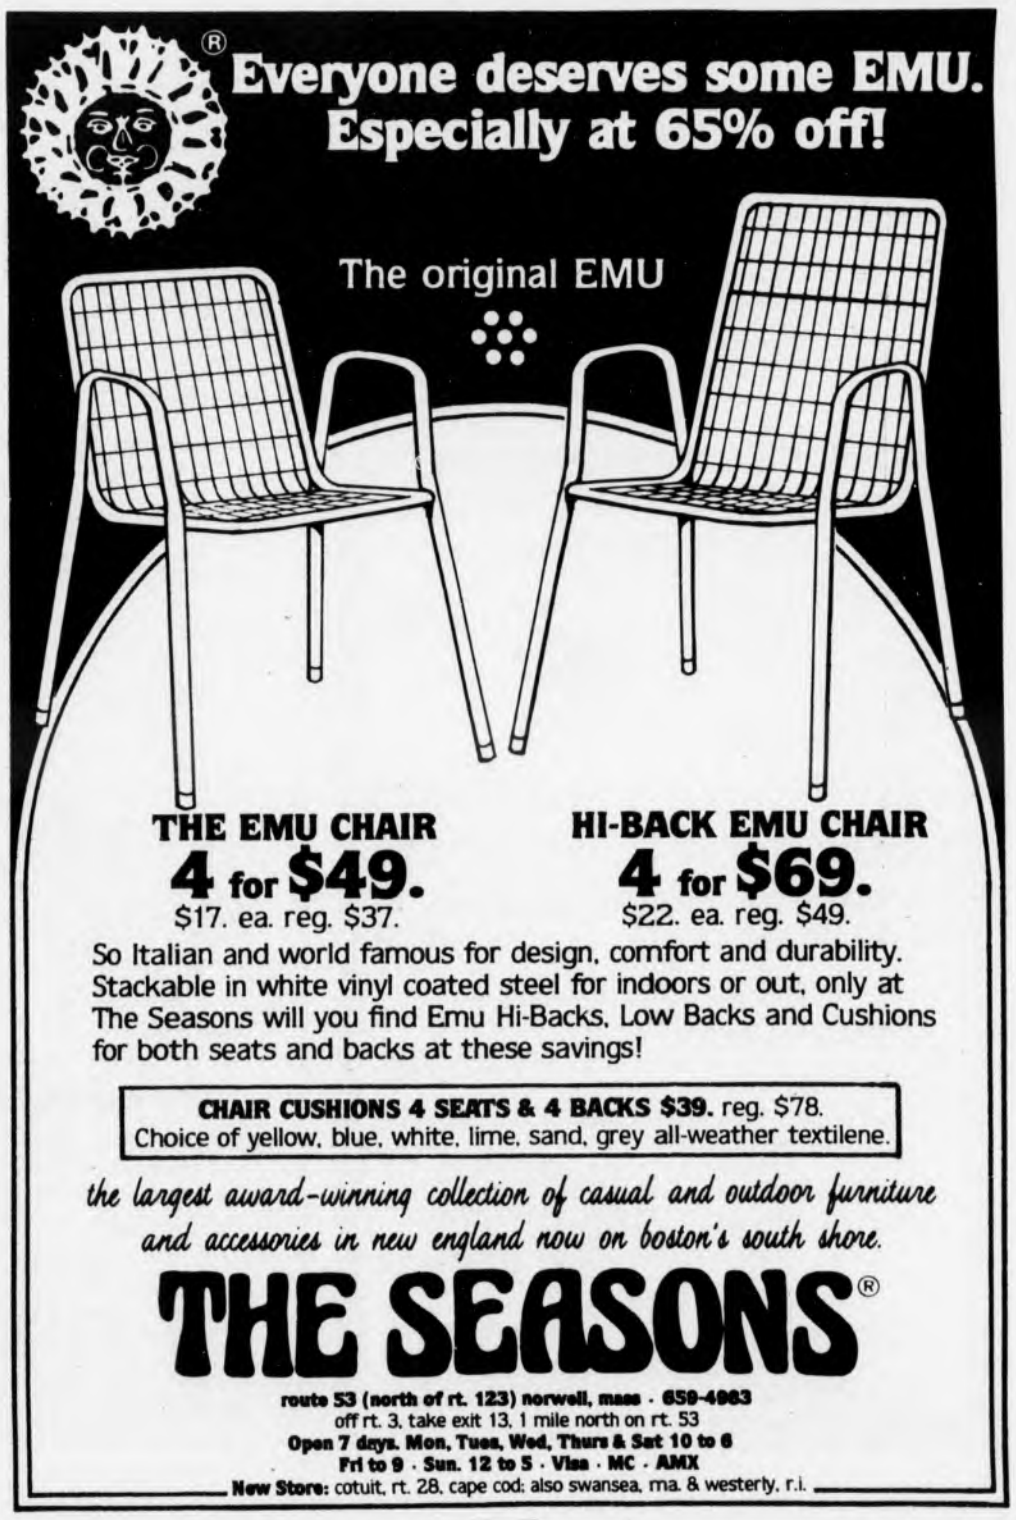
Selectmen will wait until Conley receives a medical report and will also ask the Advisory Committee if it is possible to pay an additional captain.

Fire Dept. uniforms

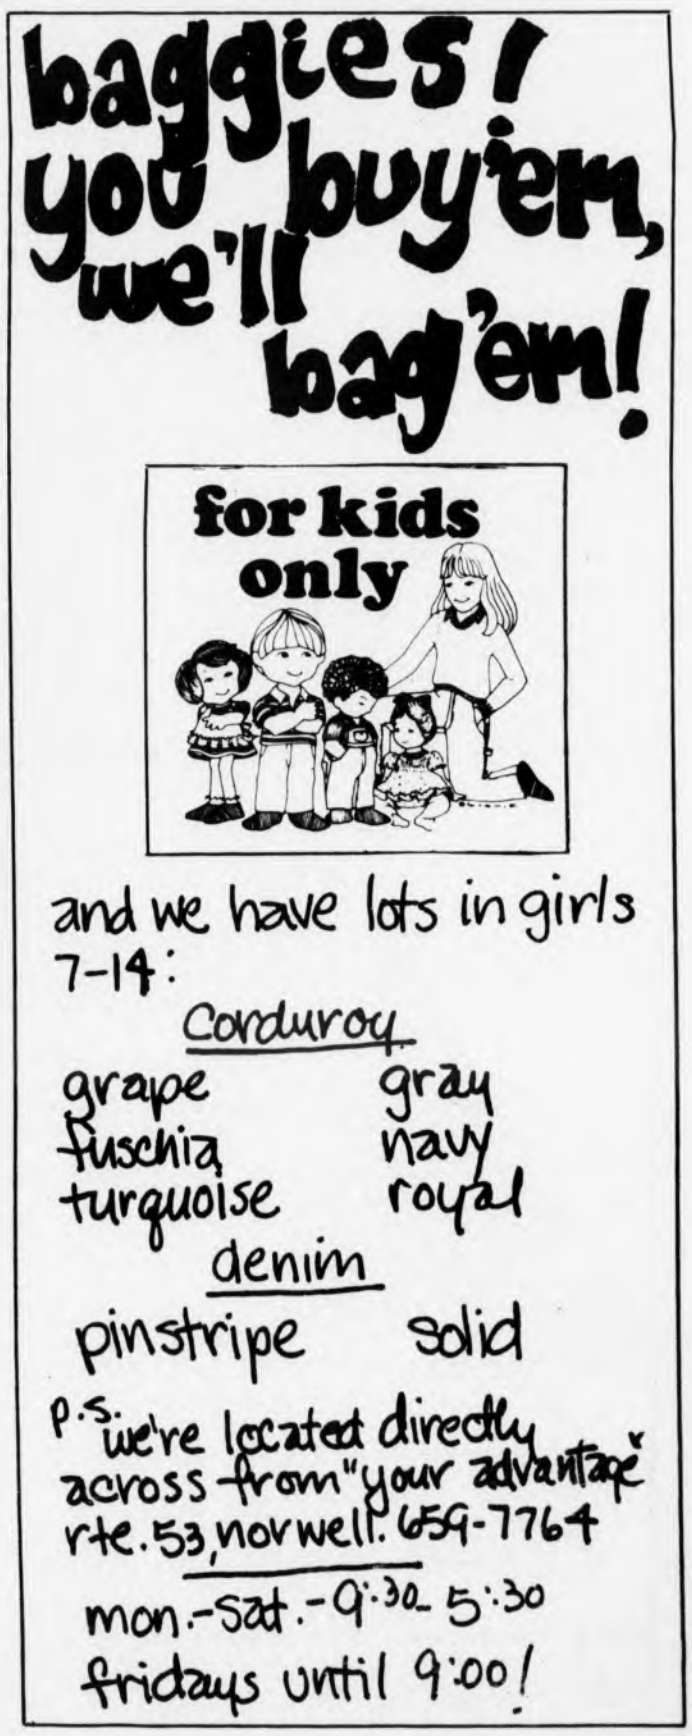
Dooley requested that each firefighter receive an annual cash sum for all uniforms instead of billing the Fire Dept. for each uniform purchased.

He said, "Based on information from officers and after consultation with Capt. Lincoln, the present system takes a lot of manhours. With the new system, we would have less paperwork and create a better system for vendors and the men."

Selectman Frank England said, "The contract says the firefighters are entitled up to and including the whole allowance unless you have an individual's approval. Otherwise you cannot change the system."



E·M·T· appointed



Selectmen accepted Dooley's recommendation and appointed Peter Trask to be an Emergency Medical Technician for the Fire Dept.

☐Richard J. Bond of Cohasset has accepted an administrative voluntary position with the United Way of Massachusetts Bay for its 1983 fundraising campaign. Bond will serve as Section Chairman of Social Agencies II and will be responsible for coordinating the drive among his section.

Executive director of the Boston Children's Service Association, Bond has been associated with the United Way since 1973. He is a member and former chairman of the National Association of Social Workers and 1982 conference chairman of the Child Welfare League of America. Bond is a published writer and received an A.B. and M.S. degree from Boston University.

The United Way's 1983 fundraising campaign goal is $32 million, a 14.8 percent increase over last year's total. This year, contributions will support 176 health and human service agencies serving more than 900,000 residents in 86 cities and towns in eastern Massachusetts. Local United Way agencies include the South Shore Chapter, Red Cross; South Shore Day Care Services; and South Shore YMCA.

The 1983 fundraising campaign begins Sept. 6 and continues through Nov. 22.

☐Cohasset residents, town government boards and civic leaders are invited to attend a reception for Cohasset Fire Chief and Mrs. Martin Dooley Sunday (Aug. 21). The reception is sponsored by the Cohasset Fireman's Benefit Association and will be held at The Lothrop House, 14 Summer Street, from 3 to 6 p.m. Many residents have donated cheeses, baked goods and other treats.

☐Recently heard Ray Kasperowicz "crowd-tested" his porch recently and everything's okay. Good going, Ray...and quite impressive.

☐Ralph Rattenbury's friends and admirers were sad to learn recently that after 15 years he has passed on. He is missed everywhere, and especially at the Cohasset Post Office where he was considered "one of the men."

☐Want to hear an interesting story? Ask Martha Gjesteby to deliver her Reindeer theory to you. Every time she tells it, it gets better.

☐That crazy DeBassio Committee (thought it dissolved) is still meeting. Only now they don't talk politics, they have races at Milligen Field at midnight, and recently held water races at Doris Golden's pool.

Patrick Plante was voted best-looking guy in a bathing suit.

☐Great job on the Cohasset phone directory, Rotary...now if we could just get our phones in working order. Many citizens of the area have taken to making their own "pole" repairs. Do you think the phone company is trying to train us?

☐The new Rotary Phone Book is out...a great effort on the part of 35 men. They have used this as a means to raise funds for their Scholarship Program, which began in 1947. At the back of the book is a list of all scholarship recipients, fun to read through. You can help them continue this great effort (this year they awarded $10,000 in scholarships) by sending a contribution in the special envelope provided in the book.

☐The CHS Class of 1938 is planning a reunion August 26, at the American Legion Hall. They even managed to get a member of the class, Mary Walsh, a resident in California, to say that she'd come. After 45 years, there should be plenty to talk about.

☐There were very few youth residents who didn't make the "Police Concert" last week. They all had a super time, most are sporting T's telling that they were there and who they saw.

☐Dick Barrow is always filling me full of news...I wonder when he'll give me something I can print.!

Gjesteby represents Cohasset on MAPC

(Martha Gjesteby was interviewed prior to the Aug.3 Mariner editorial on "Transportation Madness." Ed.-Note.)

By Theresa Sullivan

Usually when one reads of the comments of Martha Gjesteby, it usually concerns a School Committee issue. She is one dedicated school board member.

However, there is another side to her. Martha is worried about how Cohasset and area residents are going to get to Boston, especially next summer.

She feels many residents either don't care or don't know about the Expressway mess which now exists or will be compounded next year by repair work.

Gjesteby spends alot of her time traveling back and forth to Boston to attend Metropolitan Area Planning Commission meetings.

She has traveled by bus, ferry, the MBTA and automobile. She also serves on the MAPC sub-committee, Transportation Action Committee.

When the reconstruction of the Southeast Expressway begins next spring, swift access into Boston from Cohasset will be unlikely, she said.

She commented on the various modes of transportation into Boston.

"The MAPC is studying subscription bus services which will be used during the reconstruction of the Southeast Expressway," she said.

"I think as a long- term plan, the best kind of alternate transportation would be subscription buses."

She suggested running a regular schedule with pick-ups every 15 minutes. "Buses will take a lot of cars off the road. They will take 65 people," Gjesteby said.

She said the ferry is an option, but it's expensive. She mentioned van-pooling as a possibility, but said that is not enough by itself.

"Trucks should only be allowed to go at night or early in the morning," she said.

"This whole problem would have been relieved if the Red Line had come down here." In anticipation of the reconstruction, the MBTA has done nothing in the way of purchasing more cars or increasing the frequency of runs to Boston, she added.

The reconstruction of the Expressway will begin next spring and end in 1986. Work is planned on the bridges, median strips, ramps, lighting and drainage.

When the project is completed, "the roads will have no more capacity than they do now," Gjesteby said. The bridges were built in 1954.

They will work on two lanes of the eight and one half mile strip between Braintree and Boston at a time. In the morning, four lanes heading inbound and two heading outbound will be open. In the afternoon, four lanes heading outbound and two heading inbound will be open.

Gjesteby said the project may more than inconvenience South Shore residents. "I think the economic impact will be something. Plymouth is a growing area. If there are marginal companies and if most of their employees live on the South Shore, they may consider relocating," she said.

MAPC's function

The MAPC serves 104 cities and towns around Boston. It was established in 1963 to assist in economic development, land use, water quality, hazardous wastes, housing, town-center revival and transportation.

Gjesteby was elected as one of the five town representatives to serve on the executive board of the MAPC. This board also has five representatives from cities, and there are five appointments from the governor.

The MAPC is apt to give aid to regional improvement projects because the projects benefit more people. However, a town or a city may apply for assistance and the commission will award funds if it finds the project worthwhile.

Cohasset received assistance from the MAPC when the commission reviewed the town's landfill expansion plans, Gjesteby said.

Expanding commuter boat service explored

Sen. Allan R. McKinnon and state transportation officials met recently with commuter boat operators and bus company representatives to consider ways to expand commuter boat service from the South Shore.

The meeting was called to coordinate efforts to upgrade commuter boat service and to determine where state funding resources could be best used. McKinnon sees commuting by boat as an "obvious alternative" to expressway travel for many South Shore residents.

The Southeast Expressway reconstruction project is scheduled to begin next spring.

Attending the meeting were boat operators Charles English, Bill Spence, Dick Nakasian, Norm Rogers, Maddy Hughes, Al Circeo and Rick Nolan.

Officials from the Executive Office For Transportation and Construction included Anne Hershfang, Cecile Papazian and Southeast Expressway Coordinator, Pam Wolfe.

Also attending were DPW Commissioner Martha Reardon and DPW staffer Bille Gilfallon, David Barry of South Shore Bus Co., representatives of Boston Doubledeckers, Inc., and Nancy O'Toole, aide to Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray.

The group agreed more boats, improved dockside facilities, harbor debris clean-up and feeder-bus service are key elements in improving the existing system. The need for shelters for waiting commuters and parking lot improvements were also stressed.

Charles English of Mass. Bay Commuter Services, which operates the "Gracious Lady" between Hingham and Boston, said the state can best help the owners by providing loan assistance for the purchase of new boats to be owned and operated privately.

The owners differ on the need for state operating subsidies but agree that state funding could be allocated to pay for dockside costs, including rental, insurance and improvements to existing piers.

Some owners are concerned about the availability of dock space, particularly in Boston. They suggested arrangements will have to be made with the Boston Redevelopment Authority to guarantee access and use to commuter boats.

The South Shore Bus Company and Boston Doubledeckers, Inc., submitted proposals for connector-bus service on the South Shore and in Boston. Free transfer to MBTA lines was also suggested.

Senator McKinnon expects to meet again in upcoming months.

Selectmen correct

We believe that selectmen were correct, based on the information given them by the Board of Health, to overturn the board's decision to terminate Landfill Supervisor Joseph Laugelle.

As selectmen pointed out in rendering their decision, the health board simply didn't make a case for termination — an act that in the social system of the work place amounts to "capital punishment."

Moreover, it was demonstrated at the selectmen's hearing that Mr. Laugelle has made a few friends during his tenure, many of whom turned out to express their support.

If his job performance has not been in all ways perfect, neither in selectmen's judgement has the supervision he has received.

As we see it — and as selectmen have ordered it — it is the health department's unfilled duty to give Laugelle the tools, the support, and the supervision he needs to do his job and to improve upon what most of his friends and neighbors seem to believe has been pretty good service to the town.

The board of health has the legal right to appeal the selectmen's decision to overturn Laugelle's dismissal. We hope they will forego the litigious course and get on with the perhaps laborious but surely not impossible task of mending fences with "Skinny" Laugelle. The burden, of course, falls equally on Laugelle to mend fences with the board of health.

For in truth if these differences are not promptly laid to rest and a good working relationship restored, the only loser will be the town.

Observation

One Cohasset resident called to say there is some relevance in the Pulitizer Prize winning book "Caine Mutiny," authored by Herman Wouk to the "No Confidence" vote of Fire Chief Martin Dooley.

In the book the defense attorney for Lt. Commander Philip Francis Queeg said (paraphrased): You talk behind his back, you countermand his orders. But did you try to help him?

Dieting drives 'Mom' nuts

By Claire McDonough

"Don't do anything to upset your mother," the Dragon whispered. "She's dieting again, and you know what that does to her disposition."

"I heard that," I snapped, "and I don't know what you're talking about. You know perfectly well that dieting has no effect on me at all."

Breida and Skipper started to giggle and I spun around.

"Just stop that, you two. You know I didn't mean that dieting doesn't have any effect. It has the effect of making me thin. However, it has no effect on my temperament. I am as calm, rational and even-tempered as ever."

They clasped their hands over their mouths and turned bright red. Their shoulders shook and their eyes watered.

"I'm serious," I told them quietly. "Dieting does not affect my nature because I have learned to control my mind. I simply don't think about food."

The Dragon carefully studied a spot on the wallpaper.

"Then why did you draw pictures of roast turkeys all over the margins of last week's Mariner?" he asked blandly.

"Because," I snarled, "I was thinking of a turkey I happen to live with. Anyway, you people have been doing everything in your power to sabotage my efforts. Just this afternoon Skipper walked right by me carrying a plate of delicious looking food. Breida asked me how to spell 'cherries jubilee.' "

Breida and Skipper gave up all attempts at restraint. They leaned against each other, tears of helpless laughter coursing down their cheeks.

"That was a plate of coffee grounds, egg shells, toast crusts and cigarette butts that I was carrying out to the compost heap."

"I was trying to do a crossword puzzle."

Patrick grinned. "If you don't let yourself think of food, how come you keep calling 'Fleetwood Mac' 'Big Mac'? And why did you sign last week's AROUND TOWN 'Claire McNuggets'?"

"Yeah," Larry interjected, "I heard her telling Mrs. Lane she was going to the dumpling when she meant to say 'dump.' "

"Those were perfectly natural slips of the lip," I began softly. "If you and your quohogs, er, cohorts, had any sense at all you'd realize that I am not thinking about food. I mean, I don't know what your beef is, but you really take the cake."

My voice became a little louder as I turned to the Dragon. "If you were a gentleman and a scallop, um, scholar, you'd wait to see the results before you started to egg them on. After all, the proof of the pudding is in the eating, now isn't it? But you have to count your chickens before they're hatched, don't you?"

My voice was rapidly approaching the registers that only dogs can hear.

"Do you want to know what I'm thinking about? I'm thinking about literature. I'm thinking about great writers like Francis Bacon, Stephen a la King, Baker, Rice, Oates.

"Do you want to know what I'm thinking about? I'm thinking about the great American novel, 'Gone With The Wind.' "

I ran across the room and grabbed a bag of Fritos from the Dragon.

"I swear," I told him, holding my treasure in a hand that shook, "I'll never be hungry again."

Refugees are settling in Massachusetts

By Moira McCarthy

Refugees are pouring into the country, as well as Massachusetts, in phenomenal numbers. As of this year, 18,000 refugees reside in Massachusetts. Approximatrely 1200 of those live on the South Shore.

How do they learn and adapt to American culture? The Urbanistic Human Services League is doing all they can to help.

The League was innitiated three years ago by Hingham Residant Stan Nikkel. Nikkel was a professor at The University of Massachusetts in Boston, when he began to get involved with fair housing for minorities, and employment for minorities.

"I started the league as a result of the realization that refugees were not obtaining basic skills in the English language and American culture, and as a result, they have no chance of getting jobs," he said.

And so, with the help of Nancy Keyes, he convinced the government of the need for the league, and it was founded in December of 1980.

"I was always interested in the way Americans became Americans, and now I had a chance to take part in the process," he said.

Now, most rfugees that come into the state are refered to the league.

A refugee is different from an imigrant in that they must come to the United States, because they are in danger of suffering religious or political persecution in their own country.

"Most of them would be killed, or at the very least tortured or imprisoned if they returned to their country," he added.

They are all legally brought into the country.

Of the 1200 refugees south of Boston, most are placed with sponsor families by Catholic charities, the Lutheran church, world relief programs, and other volunteer agencies. It is here that the League comes in.

The League offers classes for training in the American culture to any refugee that wants them. In Hingham, they meet twice a week at the South Shore Baptist Church. It is here that they learn to master the English language, as well as learn basic coping skills needed to survive in the United States.

Connie Baynes of Hingham is one of the teachers there.

"There are some cambodians who are illiterate in their own language, so it's hard to teach them our language when they don't even have the concepts down," she said.

"Basically, you start with a smile, some warmth, and a lot of caring. You have to establish a relationship, and a learning atmosphere."

Once Baynes has done this, she begins teaching with simple nouns, and a few survival skills that they absolutely have to have. She taches them their name, their address, and how to say hello.

"It's all done with patterning," she explained, "I ask the question, and then say the answer. I say, 'how are you? I am fine.' and they repeat. After a while, they understand that this is the common way to answer. I

Are you happy about your daycare arrangements?

By Patricia Desmond

What do you do about daycare and are you happy with your arrangements?

The Mariner took this double-edged question to 12 mothers of preschool children as a beginning.

They all said they were satisfied with the situation — which ranged from a husband, to a neighborhood friend, to a combination parttime housekeeper and babysitter to a daycare center.

Who cares for the children seems to involve as many different possibilities as there are working mothers.

"Happy is too strong a word for how I feel," one Hingham woman said. "I don't want to put my career on hold. It was going too well. So I work parttime to keep my hand in and Robby plays with another three year-old in the neighborhood."

The reason that woman, teacher, decided to work through her son's preschool years is due to fear that she wouldn't be able to find work in her field if she gave up her tenured position.

She said she wishes she were with him more. She teaches parttime.

"I only work when my husband is at home," a Scituate woman said. "It wouldn't pay me enough if I had to hire a babysitter. If I really had a choice I wouldn't work at all. I'm always tired when I'm there."

She's a waitress and her youngest is two. Neither of those women were willing to be identified because they worried about what their bosses would think about their work attitudes.

"You get very little understanding from employers about the problems with children," a Norwell woman said. "All my employer needs to hear is that I'm using a 14 year-old kid to babysit for the summer. He'll know why I've been out sick six times and I'll be looking for a new job."

That woman happens to be an advertising executive who had her daycare plans disrupted drastically when her mother-in-law became ill.

"If I weren't happy with how things were working out, I'd change them," said a Marshfield woman whose three year-old goes to a daycare center in Pembroke.

"This is the third different care arrangement for David," she said. The other two arrangements — both women who took children into her home - worked for awhile.

The U.S. Department of Labor says that half the mothers of children under six are employed. If those figures hold for Massachusetts most of the preschool children with working mothers are being cared for outside the regulated daycare system.

The state keeps figures on daycare since it is licensed. The people at the Office for Children at the State House had the numbers on the tip of the computer.

There are 1,612 licensed daycare centers statewide. In those centers, there are 747 infants and 3,687 toddlers. Another 2,426 special needs children receive daycare.

Not all women who take children into their homes go through the licensing process although state regulations say they should. So the next number is lower than the reality...but there are 5,876 licensed family centered daycare homes. The regulations allow up to six children in this sort of home situation or a possible 35,256 children.

Why a daycare home rather than a daycare center?

One of the mothers, who commutes to a job in Boston from Hanover, explained it as the only solution for her. Day care centers all close at a specific time and her job doesn't always allow her to beat rush hour traffic back home by 6 or even 6:30 p.m.

"It's a question of flexibility," the woman said. "My job demands I be flexible and the only daycare center I ever tried had no leeway about closing time."

One daycare worker said she thinks there will be more types of options available for parents in the future.

"This is still a new industry," she said.

But should daycare be an industry at all?

There is one nonprofit daycare center on the South Shore. South Shore Daycare Services has programs in a variety of towns. There is a daycare center in the Hingham Ammunition Depot that is ready to celebrate its 10th anniversary by expanding its operation. The same agency runs after school daycare in Hull and Quincy and has a system of family daycare that offers support services to women who care for children in their own homes.

Nancy Clark, director of the Hingham center, says that there will be some openings after the building expansion. Right now the program is filled.

The Hingham center serves children from various economic backgrounds. Some of the children there are paid for through state funds, some parents pay the full fee, and United Way and John Hancock have donated money to allow a sliding scale fee for others.

South Shore Daycare, since it is nonprofit and subsidized, has a relatively low ratio of children to teachers.

The program provides an educational experience that has little apparent structure.

Clark refers to it as a subtle structure.

"We structure the environment before the children come in," she said. "There are different interest areas.

"A child can explore and discover by himself, with a friend, with a teacher..."

As she explains it the children in the center have many choices.

"Of course, a child just coming into the center wouldn't be given as many choices. We have to help the children learn how to be more autonomous. You can't be self-directed right away."

And she feels some children will always need more structure.

Sometimes the idea of choices is all in the way it's viewed. For instance a child might be asked at clean up time whether he'd rather pick up the blocks or the cars.

She said she still finds people who think of daycare as custodial.

"We're professionals here," she said adding that many of the learning concepts in the field of early childhood development are finding their way into the primary grades.

She thinks there's a need for an after school program in Hingham. While some daycare centers accept children after school, there is no separate program for school children in any of the six Mariner towns.

Parents in Hingham have told her they find it difficult to hire babysitters for the hours after school.

Daycare Centers

Most of the daycare centers in this area still have a few openings for the fall session. Most of the daycare centers in this area weren't here 15 years ago, although some of the workers were doing what they do now on a smaller scale.

"The need for daycare is growing all the time," one worker said.

Among the daycare centers in this area are: Kids Count II in Scituate, Hanover Nursery School and Day Care Center, ABC in Marshfield, Kindercare in Pembroke, South Shore Daycare, The Schoolhouse and Dolly's, all in Hingham.

'My man wears English Muffin'

By Moira McCarthy

It would be the product of the 80's. A small, clear bottle that helps women lose weight, and men attract women at the same time. People everywhere would flock out to buy it, men of all nations wouldn't think of going without it.

Scientific discovery? Hardly. I'm surprised no one thought of it before.

Food scented aftershave.

Imagine: an attractive man sits next to you at the local bar. He leans past you to grab an ashtray, and you get a whiff, but just a whiff, of something like a newly opened bag of 'Ruffles.'

"What's that great aftershave you're wearing?" you ask with gruff anticipation.

He looks you in the eye, with cocky confidence.

"Why, it's Chips, baby. Bet you'd like a nibble."

And voila! You're a victim of your passions.

And the commercial aspect has endless possibilities.

There's the one with the young couple, snuggling together on the 'morning after.'

She nuzzles his neck, sighs, and looks provocatively into the camera.

"All my men were English Muffin," she whispers. And of course, that one smells like Thomases, nooks, crannies and all. (For her, there is no other aftershave).

And it could be a world wide, multi-marketed venture.

In China, Old Spice would be replaced by Fried Rice.

In France, Prince Matchabelli would be sold out by Minced Much-in-your-belly.

Everyone who's anyone in South Boston would replace their Brut with Brew. Joe Namath would agree to do the commercials, and this one would be a big seller among college dorm students.

For the teenage market, the scents would be more playful than provocative.

Aunt Polly would give each nephew their own Eau-de-pizza soap-on-a-rope for Christmas. And adolescent gals would absolutely die over any lab partner that wore Pierre's Calzones. Calzones are the newest, after all!

I can see Weight Watchers endorsing these products, as well as the Family Guidance centers.

Let's face it, is there a better husband than the one that smells like a pu-pu platter for six?

And you can't inhale calories through your nose.

If I could just get a toll-free number and midnight spot on Channel 56, I'd be on the next Fortune cover, for sure.

Refugees are settling in Mass.

say 'where do you live? I live in Hull' and they repeat. After a while, they know where they live." And then, Baynes said, you elaborate from there.

But the majority of the refugees have had some sort of training in their own language, at least to third or fourth grade, Baynes said.

In the next room over, Jeffery Diluglio works with the literate refugees, teaching them the English language. The course is intensive; no one utters a word of their own language. When one older man got confused and began speaking his own language, Jeff says to him, "What's that you're saying? We don't understand that!" the class bursts into laughter. They can all empathize with that error.

Jeff's dynamic personality peps the class up. This struggle with overcoming a language barrier seems so fun to the group of refugees.

He makes the learning experience a personal one for each student, and helps them to get to know one another as friends.

He walks over to Kim. "When you got married, what did you wear?" he asks him.

Kim thinks for a moment. "I wore. . . white and red!"

His wife starts laughing. "He lies!"

Now the whole class is laughing.

"OK, class, now all together. 'When Kim got married, he wore white and red.'" The class repeats.

Jeff has other fun exercises that teach the class English in a fun way. Each student gets up and acts out their job, and then the class guesses the name of the profession, and spells it out.

In another lesson, Jeff covers his mouth and says fifteen, or fifty, and the class has to point to the number he is saying, whithout watching his lips.

But other than mastering the language, the teachers help the refugees learn the customs of America.

"We teach them the basic things that they need to know to survive in America, things that we take for granted," Baynes said.

These lessons include how to use a key, a toilet, a telephone, a stove, an oven. They are taught how to get to places, whether it be on public transportation, or walking. They are taught how to get food stamps, welfare, how to shop in a supermarket, and how to cash a check and open a bank account.

The amount of time between arriving in America and fully adjusting to the society depends on the individual, Baynes said.

All of these refugees have gone to resettlement camps, where they are given at least an introduction to American culture.

From there it depends on how involved the refugees are with their sponsor families, Baynes said.

"The state requests that a refugee adjust to American culture and get a job within 18 months, but many people at the League feel that 18 months isn't enough time.

"Nine to 18 months is a fair time for them to learn basic survival skills, but it's more like three years for them to completely adjust," Baynes said. "Many women are at home with the kids for the first couple of years that they are here, only speaking their own language, so it takes them longer to adjust."

But once the refugees get on the road to adjustment, they usually succeed.

"These people may not know English, but they still have skills," Nikkel said. He pointed out that many of the refugees were executives in their own country, but had to hide that fact, because most high level businessmen were executed.

"They go into publishing, restaurants, fish processing, assembly, electronics, coat tailoring. You name it. These are hardworking people, they really are successful.

Advisory Committee briefs

New officers

Last week, the Advisory Committee elected Jim Lagrotteria as chairman of the committee. Jacqueline Dormitzer is the new vice-chairman, and Fred Koed is the new secretary.

Lagrotteria said he will review the 42 municipal departments and determine the sub-committee assignments for each board member by the next advisory committee meeting.

Tri-town representative

Fred Koed volunteered to serve as the Advisory Committee representative to the tri-town Wastewater and Sewage Commission. Hingham and Hull are the other towns which make up the commission. John DeBassio represents Cohasset selectmen.

Fence repairs denied

The Advisory Committee denied a request for the repairs of the fence around Government Island and the stone work around Minot Light. This includes a brass template which indicates north, south, east and west.

Chairman Jim Lagrotteria said the $700 transfer request by Executive Secretary Mark Lanza was rejected because the application was submitted 45 minutes prior to the advisory board meeting.

Transfer actions

The Advisory Committee transferred $440.25 from its reserve fund for a vacuum cleaner for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The library has 6,000 square footage of carpeting.

The board also transferred $2,185 to the harbormaster's office for a new outboard engine for a patrol boat.

Five hundred and $50 was transferred to the Board of Health for the rental of a chemical toilet for one year. The portable toilet will be located at the Cedar Street landfill.

The Advisory Committee transferred $33,186.50 from reserve funds to the Fire Department. As a result of a decrease in federal aid, $9,366 was transferred to pay department manpower costs. In addition, $23,820 was transferred to cover overtime costs.

The Advisory Committee chairman does not like town departments spending beyond their budgets when it is not an emergency.

Board chairman Jim Lagrotteria questioned the "propriety of the departments expending money without having the authority to do so. I think departments have to be told that.

"I'd like to avoid being handed a transfer from a department at the last minute," Lagrotteria said.

He said some departments have the attitude, "You didn't give us enough money in our budget; we told you we needed it; so we spent it."

Most of the requests for transfers from the reserve fund are not emergencies, Lagrotteria said.

Town Accountant Bill Signorelli said, "When a head of a department has needs for additional funds, he should submit a request and discuss it with the subcommittee."

Special town meeting

There will be a special town meeting Tuesday, Sept. 20 to decide how the town is going to pay some $50,000 in unpaid bills for Fiscal Year 1982-83.

Dr. TV opens in Cushing Plaza shopping area

Cushing Plaza owner Zaven A. Dadekian and Ted and Marilyn Jarvis of Dr. T.V. of Weymouth have signed a long-term lease on a 2,400 sq. ft. store next to the Corner Meat Shop Market at Cushing Plaza.

Renovations have already been completed and the store opened recently.

Dadekian described Dr. T.V., in business since 1960 at its Weymouth location, as "another quality addition to the new Cushing Plaza."

Ted and Marilyn Jarvis purchased the business in October, 1981, and they employ three technicians with nearly 50 years of collective experience.

The store will offer televisions (Sylvania, Philco, Toshiba and more) and appliances such as Gibson, Maytag, Frigidaire, Kelvinator, G.E., Magic Chef and more.

In addition, Dr. T.V. will carry a full line of microwaves, stereos, CBs and accessories, police and fire scanners and accessories for T.V.s, microwaves and stereos.

Another feature of the store will be a full line of video cassettes and discs and the store will feature a "Movie Club" where patrons may rent first-run movies.

The store will feature various financing plans and will honor Master Card and Visa.

"We are proud to have Ted and Marilyn Jarvis join us," said Joseph Quinn, Cushing Plaza manager.

Woman Loses 83 Lbs. on No-Hunger, No-Boredom Weight Loss Program

By Don Davis
Special Writer

The world seems to have an entirely different attitude toward a woman who weighs 215 pounds and one who weighs 132 pounds. Jusk ask Jane McLeod.

"It seems that people just have negative feelings toward fat people," Jane says. "When I weighed 215 pounds I sat in the accounting department where I work and no one knew I was alive.

"Now that I'm 132, people pat me on the back and say I'm doing a good job," she says. "In the elevator people wouldn't say a word to me. Now people — particularly men — go out of their way to be nice to me. It's amazing the way people's attitudes change. I'm the same person as I was before."

Well, not exactly. Jane may think she's the same person as she was before losing 83 pounds at Nutri System Weight Loss Medical Center, but she certainly doesn't look like the same person.

Her own son, looking at a photo taken before the weight loss, didn't recognize her. "When I told him it was me, he said, "Boy, were you gross."

A very close friend who hadn't seen Jane in six months didn't recognize her. "In fact, my own grandmother didn't recognize me," she laughs.

The change is Jane's appearance is absolutely remarkable. Anyone who moves down from a size 22 to a size 9 has gone through a major transformation.

"It's the most positive experience I've ever had in my life," Jane says. "I'm much happier, much healthier. It's increased my self-confidence and my self-esteem."

And there's tremendous pride and satisfaction in finally conquering a problem she has battled for almost 10 years. "I'd tried everything possible to lose weight. Nothing worked for very long. I was like a yo-yo going up and down.

"I wanted to take it off quickly, that's why I turned to Nutri/System," Jane says. Thousands of overweight people are turning to Nutri/System in every part of the country, making it one of the fastest growing weight control programs in the nation.

Nutri/System promises quick weight loss and it delivers on the promise. "I lost nine pounds the first week," says Jane, "and about four pounds every week after that until I had lost all the weight."

Nutri/System delivers the kind of quick results time-after-time because it is a comprehensive program that leaves nothing to chance. It's a safe, medically-supervised program that includes a great no-hunger food plan, personalized counseling, behavior education classes, optional exercise and a long-term maintenance phase.

The first step of Nutri/System's weight control plan is establishing a realistic weight goal for each client. The Centers use Nutri/System's exclusive Weightminder computer to help pinpoint an ideal weight. The computer also predicts the number of days it will take to reach the goal.

Clients receive a written guarantee that they will achieve their goal in the predicted number of days or they remain in the program at no extra charge until all the weight is lost.

The client receives a complete and thorough medical examination from the Center's licensed physician. A team of nurses keep close watch on the clients' health throughout the reducing phase.

Losing pounds is safe, quick and easy with Nutri/System's own line of low-calorie, high-protein foods. Clients eat three hearty meals a day plus snacks and lose weight in a hurry.

Jane McLeod recalls feeling "no one knew I was alive" when she was a very unhappy 215 pounds

Down to 132 and 40 inches slimmer after her NutriSystem program, Jane is "happier and healthier", and is buying shorts and bathing suits "for the first time in years!"

"The food is really very good," Jane declares. "I was never bored and I was never hungry. You know exactly what to eat, so you can't make mistakes. Most women's downfall is preparing diet foods. They have to measure everything exactly, and they think another ounce of this or that doesn't matter, but it does."

With Nutri/System meals there is no measuring, weighing, calorie-counting or guessing.

"I found a really large selection of foods that I liked," Jane says. "I liked the fruit drinks, the cereal, the hot chocolate — the barbequed beef is out of this world! And I really liked the chicken cacciatore and meatballs. I had no hunger pangs or temptation to cheat."

And the best part for a busy working mother like Jane, was the ease of preparation. Everything is ready to heat and eat in minutes.

Another crucial component of the Nutri/System program is weekly behavior education classes. Qualified counselors and psychologists work with small groups to break old patterns of eating and to instill healthy new eating habits.

"I learned a lot," Jane says. "They make you aware of your eating, and they tell you what you can do instead of eating. The people at the Center were great to me. They really care about you. The nurses monitor your health all the time. You get the feeling that you are important to them."

The counseling, monitoring and classes don't stop when a client reaches his ideal weight. When Jane reached her goal she graduated into the year-long maintenance phase of the program.

Nutri/System believes that a client is successful only if he can maintain his weight. Nutri/System works to free clients of the constant ups and downs — the "yo-yo syndrome."

Jane says the program is working like a charm for her. "I haven't put on a pound. In fact, I've lost a couple of more pounds," she declares with obvious pride.

"Maintenance is really important," she adds. "Because after you reach your goal you go off the Nutri/System foods and back to regular foods. And people try to force you to eat, and the counselors show you how to deal with these situations."

How does Jane feel without all the extra weight? "Great, she declares. "I even jog with my son every day. Before I would be too embarrassed to even put on tights.

"And I really enjoyed clothes shopping. I bought a bathing suit and shorts for the first time in years. I'm buying designer jeans too! In my job I have to look professional. When I was heavy and wore a skirt and blouse I looked ridiculous."

Asked why Nutri/System was so effective for her when countless other attempts to lose weight failed, Jane says, "It's the program as a whole. It's not just the food or the counseling. It's everything together.

"And when you can lose three or four pounds every week without being hungry, you feel like you've really accomplished something. You never lose your enthusiasm," she explains.

The tape measure tells the tale of Jane McLeod's success better than words. She lost 14 inches from her hips, 15 inches from her waistline and 11 inches from her bust.

Cohasset swimmers place third

Saturday, Aug. 13, Cohasset swimmers and divers placed third while competing against the Hanover Swim and Tennis Club and the Aqua-Dux team in the league championship tri-meet.

Cohasset placed third, scoring 215 points, but all three teams were within approximately 20 points of one another.

The meet was closer even than the score indicates, because many races were won and lost at the finish line.

The weather was cold, mostly cloudy and very windy, so the swimmers and divers who participated should be commended for getting in the icy water!

The strong winds did not prevent divers Julia Sechen (16) and Amy Hobbs (12) from giving first rate performances as they each captured two seconds in their respective age groups. This gave Cohasset a solid start!

The swimmers also worked hard to make the meet an exciting one. The following swimmers placed first in individual events: Jon deLima, two firsts; Niffy Jackson, Caitlin Staunton, two firsts; Sara Bishop, three firsts; Chip Anderson, three firsts; Maureen Costello, two firsts; Kate deLima, Billy Baird and John Jackson.

The following swimmers placed second in individual events:

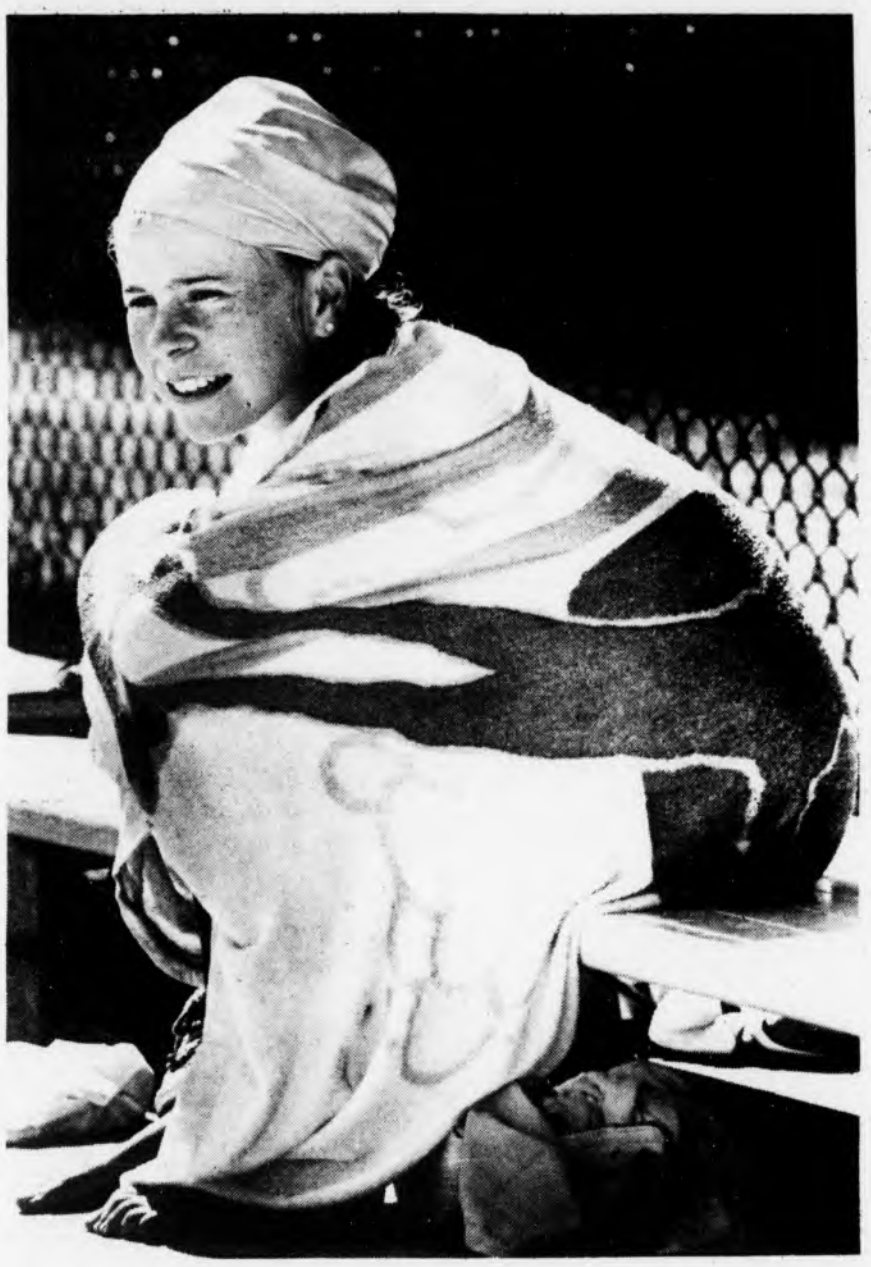
Brooke Anderson, two seconds; Emily Tague, James Dillon, Kate Anderson, two seconds; Madlyn MacDonald, Cathleen Buckley, Cole Hughes, Eric Karcher and Diane Thayer.

The following swimmers placed third:

Jamie Hoffman, Meka Laugelle, Colin Knox, Jim Reidy, Susie Camardo, Ali Welz, Joel Reidy, Greg Julian, Campbell Knox, Matt Buckley and Julie Bowdoin.

SWIM AWARDS NIGHT

The Cohasset Swim Team held its annual awards ceremony Sunday, Aug. 14, at the Cohasset Swim Center.



All the team members should be congratulated for remaining undefeated in dual meets all season. Due to Friday's nasty weather, the last dual meet vs. Hanover was cancelled. Still the team ended the season with an impressive 4-0 record.

Trophies were awarded in several categories, including the top three point scorers for girls and boys in each age group and for the most improved boy and girl in each age group. The results are as follows:

Eight years-old and under boys: third, Danny Baird; second, Tim Leary; first, Chip Anderson; most improved, Gehrt Lubitz.

Eight years-old and under girls: third, Kate deLima; second, Alix Knox; first, Meka-Mari Laugelle; most improved, Johanna Horn.

No trial yet

The next development in the case of a man accused of murdering a 20-year old Cohasset youth is Aug. 24 when the case of John Tammaro, 21, of Boston will be heard. Tammaro is accused by police of murdering Leslie Ann Haynes of Cohaset Dec. 19. Tammaro has been found competent to stand trial. Haynes's body was found slumped over the wheel of her car and she had been shot six times. Tammaro was found indicted of first degree murder. A trial date could be set after the Aug. 24 hearing. Asst. D.A. Robert Banks said the defense attorney has not received all of the complete information about his client.

Grisdale/Krieger

Mr. and Mrs. Richard D. Grisdale of Cohasset are pleased to announce the engagement of their daughter, Jennifer Karsalie Grisdale to Barry Krieger of Boston.

Mr. Krieger is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Krieger of Brooklyn, New York. He is a senior hardware engineer at IDE Associates in Bedford.

Ms. Grisdale is a technical writer at Wang Laboratories in Lowell.

An Oct. 1 wedding is planned.

Fisher Congregational Ed. Director

Scott C. Fischer of Cohasset, a graduate student at Harvard Divinity School and for the past two years Student Pastor at the Hatherly United Methodist Church, Rockland, has been named Christian Education Director of the Second Congregational Church, Cohasset for the church school year.

Announcement of the appointment was made by Mrs. Richard J. Silvia, chairman of the church's Christian Education Committee.

"We welcome Scott Fischer as our new director of Christian Education," Mrs. Silvia said.

"He brings experience and excitement to our church school program and we look forward to a most rewarding and productive year for students and staff."

Fischer left a six-year business career in sales and management to enter Gordon College four years ago. He received his B.A. degree from Gordon in 1981 in Biblical and Theological Studies with highest honors.

While at Gordon he founded and led the Gordon Bible Majors Fellowship and helped to organize and direct the Gordon Married Students Fellowship. He was awarded a Gordon-Conwell Women's Council Scholarship.

From Gordon College he went to Harvard Divinity School and during the past two academic years was also student pastor at the Rockland church which is part of the Brockton Teaching Parish Cluster. The Cluster is directed by the Rev. Dr. Julieanne Hallman, who also teaches at Andover-Newton Theological School.

His Rockland service included leading worship, preaching, visitation and pastoral care. He helped to initiate a dramatic turn-around in the Sunday School program and helped to organize and lead a church-wide planning seminar.

Scott, his wife Susan, and two children, live at 270 South Main Street.

Members of the Christian Education Committee, in addition to Mrs. Silvia, are Mrs. Gordon Hislop, Mrs. Thomas Roy, Mrs. Bradford Ketchum, Osborne Ingram, and Mrs. John W. Campbell, with the Rev. John Benbow ex-officio.

Mr. and Mrs. John Kearney

Ellen Hanlon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Hanlon of Cohasset was married to John Kearney, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Kearney of Cohasset in a June 25 service at St. Anthony's Church.

A Catholic ceremony was held and the reception was held at home.

The couple spent their honeymoon in Florida and are now living in Marshfield.

Ellen attended Fisher Junior College and John graduated from Cohasset High School.

The groom is a licensed electrician.

The Leon Merian Band performed at the wedding.

From mid-April through mid-December, the Carribean puts itself on sale. During this period, known as the "season of sweet savings," some 26 member countries of the Caribbean Tourism Association drop their hotel rates by an average of 35% to 55%. There are other special sweeteners, including, for example, one free hotel night, St. Croix, for every six paid nights. On the island of Grenada, the Calabash hotel offers a single room with breakfast and dinner for $58. This represents a savings of 57%. On Barbados, a beachview double rate at the St. James Beach Club drops 52%. What more incentive do you need to visit paradise?

Two statements, one politic, the other political

By Lois Martin

"Hey, Terry," I said. "Look, there's President Nixon the night he resigned, nine years ago. Remember that night?"

He was on the phone. I glanced at him, pointing to the newscaster who was recanting the historic night a president resigned. But he was, it seemed, in conversation with someone who was more memorable than that president to him.

Nine years ago, let's see. That would have made him eight almost nine. And it was a hot evening, I remember that because when I was asked to do an errand I couldn't bear putting on a coat.

That was in a spell when I taunted danger by running out of the house on late or early accommodating errands...

PATCHES

in my bathrobe. Only that night was worse because it was too hot for a robe. Got it? I used to laugh about it on runs to Stone's bus stop in the morning or schools late at night. Always dropping off somebody or picking them up, I was in those days.

Anyway I'd been asked to follow a car that Aug. 9, 1974 (the only one we'll ever get). A consumer was taking a run in the car with the salesman. All I had to do was pick him up after the run. But between my house and the destination, the trial car broke down, leaving two men flailing their arms fruitlessly at me as I breezed on by to the appointed place.

And Terry was with me. While I was in a summery nightgown, he was sporting a green short-sleeved Snoopy sweatshirt. And when we discovered the people we were to meet were lost, we had no choice, we thought, save to drive around in search. During that time, I instructed him to listen to the car radio because President Nixon was delivering his historic resignation speech.

As a last ditch chance at finding the lost/stranded people, we stopped at the North River House on Rte. 53. I couldn't go in, obviously, so I told Terry to do that, look about discreetly, politely, and not to tell anyone his mother was in the car in her nightdress. I knew him well. It takes one to know one, as they say.

As I slumped behind the wheel, he was making friends in the restaurant, treated kindly by workers and customers, fed treats, and escorted throughout the premises for the object of his search. I could only presume from my post that he'd been kidnapped while I was trapped in my nightie.

When he finally emerged he hadn't found who he was looking for but he was full. He'd been asked, he said, where his mother was and he'd told them, "It's a long story."

So now, nine years later, when I hear the replay of Nixon's final presidential statement, I think of that night when I swore off nightgown driving and when Terry protected me by saying, "It's a long story."

But Monday night his mind was elsewhere. It's had nine years of changing and the dark-haired little friend I used to have to go everywhere with me, is always busy planning to go elsewhere with others.

His is not the age to relish memories. His is the time to make some worth relishing. And too few of them will include that snoopy sweatshirt.

Parents delve back now and then for reassurance and entertainment. At 17-18 they delve ahead. His Nike sneakers are too big to transport a little boy, let alone to bear the constancy of boyhood yearnings.

I'll learn from him. In a month he'll be gone along with the summer. And I wish other parents, if we learn from the awesome youth, will spend more time making history than reliving it. But for the record on Aug. 9, 1974 President Richard Nixon resigned, and a small boy found a useful equivocating statement himself, one Nixon could have used, entirely politic..."It's a long story."

Mariner style tidbits

Writing style. The words evoke images of literary color and flavor, irony and humor, wit and rhythm.

But style also encompasses a set of basic rules on writing from capitalization to punctuation which, as most journalists quickly learn, can be different from publication to publication, and even subject to change in the same publication.

The Mariner recently issued a new style-sheet to streamline the reams of news copy processed each week in all six Mariner newspapers.

We share these little tidbits with our readers this week, along with a few old and trusty journalistic rules that have been cast in concrete for eons. We hope this will be useful in writing press releases, letters to the editor and public notices.

— Whether you type, hand-print or chicken scrawl a notice for the paper, always double space. Editors get very angry when there is no room to make corrections.

— Write out the words STREET or AVENUE unless it has a number before it; always write out road, lane, park, drive, etc. Route is Rte.

— Write out the numbers one to ten or numbers that start a sentence (only if they absolutely must start a sentence). Thereafter, use the number.

— Include the day and date when writing about a coming event. Write out the days of the week in full. Write out the months March, April, May, June and July; abbreviate the rest. Do not use the year unless it differs from the current year.

— Do not use the word "on" before dates, such as "on July 19." You don't say, "I'm going shopping on tomorrow," or "We went to church on yesterday."

— In referring to governmental agencies or town boards, capitalize the first full reference; thereafter use lower case.

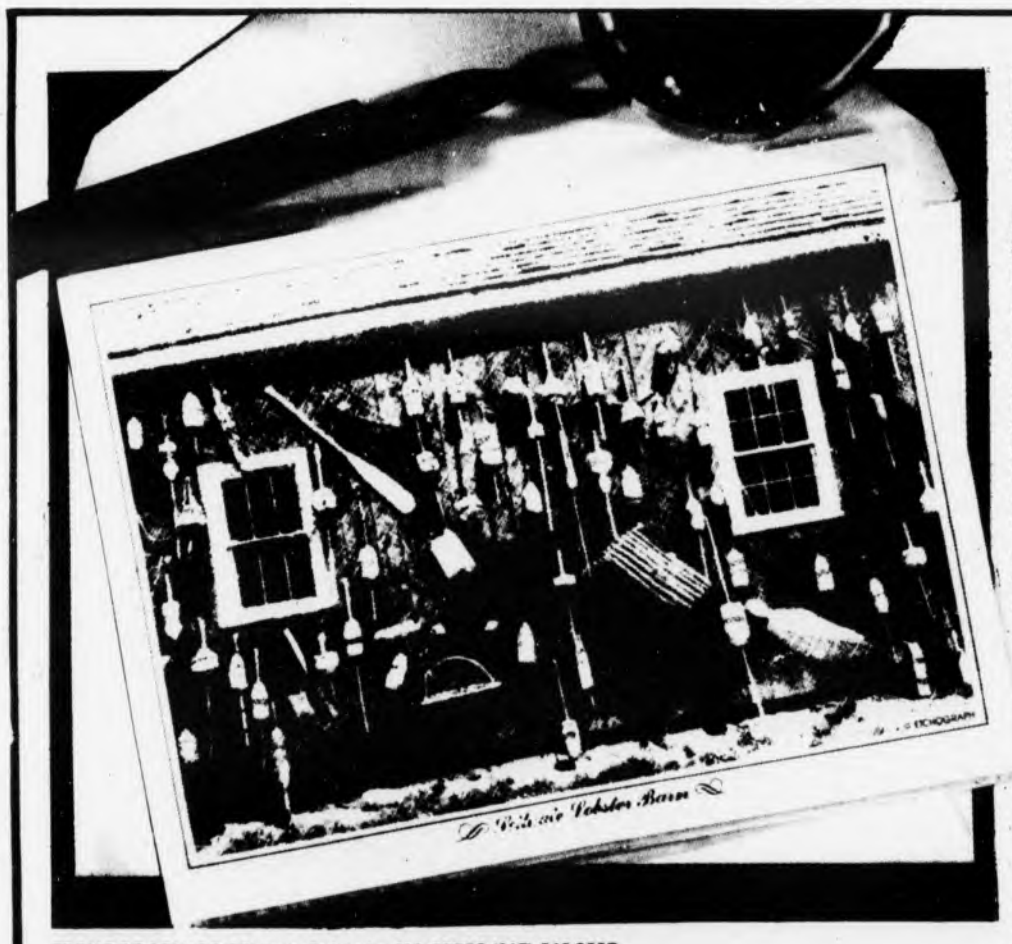
— The words STATE and TOWN are in lower case unless used in legal publications, such as a legal advertisement from the "Town of Hanover."

— Capitalize the first reference of a person's title; thereafter use lower case. Abbreviate Asst. Supt., military titles, Rev. (used in each reference).

— When listing officers of a group, use the name, office (in lower case), semi-colon. Example: John Smith, president; Sally Smith, vice president; Betty Smith, secretary.

— Never use first person references except in a letter to the editor, commentary or an article which is clearly a personal account, with a byline.

— In the Mariner, middle initials are not used except in formal releases. The full name of a man or woman is used in the first reference, with title if any, but without Mr., Mrs., Miss, Ms., again except in formal releases (wedding, anniversary, etc.). Thereafter use the last name only.



— Do not capitalize course offerings (except proper nouns such as English, French, etc.). Do capitalize degrees, Dean's List.

— All punctuation precedes ending quotation marks.

Joan Pinkham

By Joan Pinkham

"Getting away from it all" has top priority with most of us by the looks of our crowded beaches and tourist meccas. You can leave behind the old homestead, you can put aside those business worries and forget about the alarm clock while on vacation, but there's one thing you can't ignore no matter where you are. That's those hunger pangs. Much more insistent after a walk on the beach, or a whiff of fried clams from a beckoning restaurant, when you're here by the Atlantic shores, nothing will do but a feast of lobster. If you're down at the dock when the lobstermen pull in, you can bring home the makings for this casserole, a receipe from Marcia Noyes whose husband is a lobsterman. We've printed this recipe before, but good things bear repeating, so here is how to prepare Marcia's

BAKED STUFFED LOBSTER

2 small lobsters, or one large per person, cooked and cleaned. Do not ignore the meat in the body; save the tamale and roe.
3/4 c. butter, melted
1/4 c. finely chopped onion
2¼ c. small day-old white bread cubes
1 T oregano
2 T finely snipped parsley, or 1 T dry parsley
1/2 tsp. salt, dash of pepper
1/4 c. light cream
1/4 c. sherry
1/4 c. grated parmesan cheese

In 1/4 c. hot butter in small skillet, saute onion until golden brown. Add to bread crumbs in large bowl, along with next four ingredients. Toss with fork, add lobster with tamale and roe, to bread mixture, along with cream, sherry and rest of butter. Toss with fork to combine well. Place mixture in 1½ qt. casserole dish. Sprinkle with parmesan. Can be refrigerated at this point. When ready to serve, preheat oven to 375 degrees and bake 20 to 30 min. until dish is heated through. Do not overcook, as lobster meat will dry out.

Beachcombing is always at its best when the beach is empty and an early morning walk not only stirs up one's appetite, but also is rewarding in the little treasures you can pick up, such as a whelk shell, perfect for the mantel and a reminder when the fireplace is roaring on a cold winter's night of this pleasant summer interlude. The Indians made wampum from twisted spires of these whelks, shaping them into elongated beads. Whelks, as are their southern cousins, the conches, are good to eat an the main ingredient in the Italian dish "scungili." There are some long-time residents who recall the days when scallops were so plentiful at certain times of the year, that they were there for the taking at low tide in Duxbury Bay. Now, as all scallop lovers know, a dish such as Hank McAvoy cooks up, would be a very special treat. Here is how he prepares

SCALLOP KABOBS

1 pound scallops, fresh or frozen
1 can (13½ oz.) pineapple chunks, drained
1 can (4 oz.) button mushrooms, drained
1 green pepper, cut into 1" squares
1/4 c. vegetable oil
1/4 c. each of lemon juice, chopped parsley, soy sauce
1/2 tsp. salt and dash of pepper
12 slices bacon

Rinse scallops with cold water to remove shell particles. Place pineapple, mushrooms, green pepper and scallops in bowl. Combine oil, lemon juice, parsley, soy sauce, salt and pepper. Pour sauce over scallop mixture and let stand for 30 min., stirring occasionally. Fry bacon until cooked but not crisp. Cut each slice in half. Using long skewers, alternate scallops, pineapple, mushrooms, green pepper and bacon until skewers are filled. Cook about 4" from moderately hot coals for 5 min. Baste with sauce. Turn and cook for 5 to 7 min. longer, or until bacon is crisp. Serves 6.

Also combing a deserted beach at times are those who come armed with metal detectors in quest of coins, watches and other treasures lost by some unlucky sun worshipper. Some of us are happy to find a simple sand dollar, or glass ground smooth by the waves, or hurry home to a cup of Professor Clinton McCoy's soup made in a blender and called simply

MUSHROOM CREAM SOUP

A—1/2 lb. fresh mushrooms, 1/4 lb. butter
B—2 c. chicken stock
C—3 egg yolks
D—1 c. milk

Saute A. Add B and blend. Add C, blend 1 to 2 seconds. Put all in saucepan with D and heat. Season to taste.

A Beautiful Approach to Country Living.

You drive in through meadows strewn with seasonal wildflowers. But that's only your entry to the good life at The Meadows, The Green Company's new community of attached single family homes in Hingham. The architectural style is true to the farm-house heritage of the community. The construction and detailing have been accomplished with obvious pride.

The Meadows offers a selection of two and three bedroom homes with unexpected details like master suites with private fireplaced sitting areas, large country kitchens for informal entertaining, separate dining rooms for more formal occasions, hidden corners for quiet contemplation, and a mix of ceiling heights and styles. In addition there are large private courtyards, two-car garages, full basements, a swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. And best of all, this very civilized lifestyle is near major highways to the cultural delights of Boston and vacation areas to the North and South.

Prices range from $157,000 to $210,000 during this, our opening period. Furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street, one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment. When it comes to a good life in the country, The Meadows leads the field!

Barrett and Hochkeppel on stage

Two Cohasset residents will be on stage in the next dinner theatre presentation at Christo's II, Brockton.

David Barrett of Jerusalem Road and Molly Hochkeppel of Smith Place are featured in the New England premier of "Shut Your Eyes and Think of England."

The show runs seven nights over two weeks, Aug. 17, 18 and 19, and Aug. 23, 24, 25 and 26.

This British farce, fittingly subtitled "I Did It For My Country," is the newest hit from the pens of John Chapman and Anthony Marriot who gave us "No Sex Please, We're British." "No Sex..." enjoyed a successful run at Christo's last summer.

In this play Barrett portrays Sir Justin Holbrook, the ruthless, amoral head of the leading investment corporation in England and Hochkeppel plays Lady Valerie Holbrook, his long-suffering wife.

The plot mixes sheiks, call girls and a plethora of proper English people in a light-hearted if lame-brained effort to save England from bankruptcy at the hands of the Arabs.

David Barrett is familiar to area audiences for his work with the Cohasset Dramatic Club for whom he has appeared in "The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie," "Uncle Vanya," and "Man For All Seasons."

He has also been featured in Hingham with the Elizabethan Waytes and Players in "As You Like It," "The Taming of the Shrew," and "Blithe Spirit."

Earlier, David performed repertory work in England, appearing in "Major Barbara," "Worms Eye View," and "Morning Departure."

Molly Hochkeppel has appeared in "Not Now, Darling" and "The Odd Couple" at Dunfey's Hyannis Dinner Theatre. She has also been featured in "Plaza Suite," "No Sex, Please, We're British," and "Love, Sex and the IRS" all at Christo's dinner theatre.

For ticket and dinner information, call Christo's II at 588-4202.

Meet Chief and Mrs. Martin Dooley from 3 to 6 p.m. Sunday at the Lothrop House

Henry & Baccari at Bay State Games

Two Cohasset students participated in the Bay State Games at Boston University Saturday, Aug. 13.

Annie Henry, who will be a sixth grader at Deer Hill, earned a seventh place ribbon in the open solo event and Jeannie Baccari, a senior at Cohasset High School in Sept., received a third place medal in the open trio event.

The "open" category means the participant, or her partners, have placed first, second and third at a New England sanctioned meet and must be registered in the U.S. Synchronized Swimming Association.

There were 56 swimmers from five state regions entered in the all-day meet. The swimmers ranged in age from 10 thorugh the masters division.

Carol Henry of Cohasset and head coach of synchronized swimming at the South Shore YMCA in Quincy, had six swimmers in the games. She was proud of all her team members who participated on Saturday.

The girls had to perform four figures for two panels of five judges and swim a routine.

Anyone interested in finding out about the Quincy Y synchronized program may call Mrs. Henry at home.

Sewer Board challenged on 'Meats & Sweets' opening

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Two commercial owners are challenging approval by the Sewer Commission over a new business opening on South Main Street.

Former Sewer Commissioner Maxwell Pounder, his wife Sine Pounder, owner of the Bread Shop on Elm Street, and Panos "Peter" Kulturides, owner of the Log and Line on Ripley Road, attended a commission meeting.

They challenged preliminary permission given to "Meats and Sweets" which expects to open on South Main Street at Stagecoach Way.

Meats and Sweets, which also operates Ebeneezer's in North Scituate, has sought permits to sell ice cream, deli and bakery goods.

Kulturides requested to be "on record" as being opposed to both the Meats and Sweets permit and opening of "Cohasset By The Sea" Motel dining room to the public.

Kulturides said he is also the owner of the condominium portion of the railroad station building on Ripley Rd., near Depot Court. When he sought to expand his operation a few years ago, a former board rejected his plans because of the state imposed sewer expansion ban.

Pounder produced figures to show that the daily flows from Meats and Sweets woulld be 200 gallons in excess of previous use. Pounder's wife, Sine, said her business is limited to 150 gallons water per day use, and she is only permitted to bake bread and cookies, but not pies and other pastries.

Pounder also said when Meats and Sweets gave their operations in Dorchester as comparable for flows, they did not include the last two quarters which showed a significant increase over reported use.

He said the history of the Dorchester flows showed increasing usage over time, as compared to their original use.

Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild says subsequent investigation by sewer plant supervisor Manuel Salvador discovered Meats and Sweets abandoned their Dorchester operation a few months ago, and two apartments now occupy the premises.

Kulturides says Meats and Sweets is not owner-operated as his business is. He says he expects under absentee ownership, flows may even exceed expectations.

Kulturides added in order to meet his flow requirements he has all his dishes prescrubbed in a pan of water, before being put in his four-gallon dishwasher which holds 18 settings.

He says Meats and Sweets has a three bay sink with a hose spray. "If my son or I did not do the dishes, and I let one of the kids working out front do the dishes without supervision, you should see the number of gallons they will let spray from a spray hose. They will just wave it around while they are thinking or talking about something else!" said Kulturides.

Meeting With State

Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis said he is sending a letter to Brian Jeans of DEQE regarding the meeting he has been requesting since June.

DeSantis asked the state for $100,000 for a complete study of the towns alternate needs. He is interested in achieving results for the entire town, he says.

Commissioner Ted Guild has suggested at two recent sewer meetings that the commission may have to ask the town for $200,000 to repair the present sewer plant to meet state discharge requirements, if the state will not fund DeSantis' plan.

Rate increase hearing

The state Dept. of Public Utilities will hold a public hearing in Brockton to give the public an opportunity to comment on the $6.8 million proposed rate increase of Eastern Edison Company.

Eastern Edison serves Cohasset and Scituate residents.

The public hearing will be held Tuesday, Aug. 23, at 7 p.m. at the Brockton City Council Chambers, 45 School Street, Brockton.

This hearing is the beginning of a six-month investigation by the DPU into the proposed 4.5 percent rate increase of Eastern Edison Company. The rates were scheduled to go into effect Aug. 1, but the DPU, in accordance with its standard practice, suspended the effective date of the rate increase until Feb. 1.

During the suspension period, the DPU will hold hearings to evaluate the reasons for the company's rate request and will determine what amount of increase may be warranted.

The company's last general rate case was decided by the DPU Nov. 9, 1982, when it received a $3.6 million rate increase. The rate was reduced from the $10.7 million increase requested in that case.

Residents rally to offer support

Cohasset mourns the Nardo family loss

By Mike Berger

Friday, Aug. 19 at 11:27 p.m. will be remembered as a nightmare for all Cohasset residents.

Three of Cohasset's prized possessions, Andrew Nardo, 1, and sisters, Andrea, 4 and Amy, 2½ died as a roaring fire moved quickly in their North Main Street home.

The state Fire Marshal's office and the Fire Dept. are still investigating the cause of the fire which broke out in a second-floor bedroom.

Andrea and Amy were sleeping in the same room. Andrew was sleeping alone in a crib in the parent's adjacent bedroom.

Hundreds of Cohasset residents attended a Tuesday morning Mass of Angels at St. Anthony's Church. A deep sadness and sense of tragedy is felt by everyone.

The Cohasset Rotary Club, after an emergency meeting, Saturday, began a "Nardo Family Memorial Fund."

Club member Wayne Sawchuck said the response from all over the South Shore and Boston area has been "fantastic" and the fund will be very successfull.

At 11:28 p.m., Friday, firefighters received a call from Eileen Nardo who called the fire station to sound the alarm.

Firefighters and Police Officer Dick Abbadessa ran into the home, crawled up the stairway and got Andrew from the first bedroom on the right.

When firefighters arrived, Eileen Nardo ran out of the house, screaming for help. Firefighters restrained her from trying to go back into the burning house. Vincent Nardo, Jr. was not at home at the time of the fire. He arrived a few hours later.

Capt. James Lee Gurry immediately applied mouth-to-mouth resuscitation to Andrew and he was rushed to South Shore Hospital where he was pronounced dead by medical authorities.

When firefighters reached Andrew, a mass of intense heat and smoke drove them back. They were unable to reach the two sisters, 10 feet away in the other bedroom.

Fire Chief Martin Dooley said the home had two working smoke detectors, one outside the upstairs bedrooms and another next to the front door. The blaze was so intense, Dooley said, one detector disintegrated.

"The feelings of Cohasset residents are ones of shock and grief . . . The Nardos have lost a whole family and their lifestyle has immediately changed . . . It's an empty feeling."

The fire was confined to the second floor bedroom. The room was completely gutted and flames and smoke were coming out of the window at the height of the fire.

State fines town $1,000 per day

The state is fining Cohasset $1,000 a day for not accepting a $1.1 million grant to construct a large central sewer plant.

The fine was effective April 11 which means if enforced, Cohasset must pay over $100,000.

Town officials plan to fight the fine in court. Notice of the fine was received by selectmen and the Sewer Commission Thursday.

The letter, written by Atty. Anne Rogers, environmental attorney for the state Attorney General's office essentially says Cohasset is not in compliance with an earlier state agreement.

This agreement called for Cohasset to build a central sewer plant by a certain date and for the town to reach certain milestones.

However, two town meeting votes gave the sewer board permission to research and develop alternative and less expensive sewer systems.

Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis is elated the state is finally "doing something."

He said the sewer board has constantly asked for meetings with Rogers but to no avail.

"I am wondering why it took the state from April 11 to Aug. 16 and why no discussion took place," said DeSantis.

At least, he added, "we will do some talking."

DeSantis isn't sure if the issue will be settled in or out of court. "Personally I feel this will be resolved in court but I'd like to see it resolved out of court."

Selectmen are backing him on his fight to appeal the fine and to reach some agreement with the state. He

A conversation with Congressman Gerry Studds

By David Cutler

"I used to dread so many things . . . like the next day or the next schedule or the next campaign."

Congressman Gerry Studds
August 18, 1983 at an interview with the Mariner

Gerry Studds does not appear to dread a great deal these days. He is not sour, he is not bleak; he does not seem in any way depressed.

Despite all that has happened over the last five weeks—the startling revelations on his affair with a congressional page and the House Censure that followed, despite the massive attention from the media ("hoopla," he believes is the correct term), and despite sharp criticism from some angry constituents—Gerry Studds seems a happy, hopeful man who is concerning himself with the future. "I may just be beginning to peak," he said.

Last week in an hour-long interview, what has been called his "aloof" demeanor was nowhere to be seen. Instead he was affable and calm and often humorous.

What would you like to talk about? he was asked at the outset.

"The cranberry harvest."

Studds may have preferred to talk cranberries or about Central America—"It's right down the tubes if we continue to do what we're doing now"—but he was willing to talk, on the record, about himself, in a most personal way.

To wit:

☐"Some terribly important things have happened to me personally. I have a whole new burst of energy. I have spent the past four weeks trying to find the words.

☐"For the first time, I don't have to hide a significant portion of myself.

☐"The ability to look everyone straight in the eye . . . represents a very, very dramatic transformation in my life.

☐"There is an inner tranquility and calm in me that was never there before.

☐"I have never intended to defend or excuse what I did.

☐"I cannot but believe that I am a much more enjoyable person than I was 10 years ago."

By now Congressman Studds has answered most of the questions 10 times over. August, when Congress is not in session—is usually vacation time. This year it is a time for open meetings with constituents—there have been four so far—and a time to answer an unending series of questions from the press. Central America and offshore drilling and fishing problems are not high on the agenda.

Channel 5 was at the congressman's regional office in Hanover last Wednesday, followed quickly by two reporters from the Mariner. That night no less than 20 reporters would cover an open meeting at the Furnace Brook School in Marshfield that drew nearly 400 people. Most open meetings draw 30 or 40 people and a single reporter.

Studds is bemused by press accounts that portray

Dooley reception

About 250 residents attended the festive reception for Fire Chief Martin Dooley, his wife and daughter, sponsored by the Firemen's Benefit Assn. The call firemen and their wives provided homemade refreshments in the historic Lothrop House Sunday afternoon. Many local businesses also contributed platters of food, donated several flower arrangements for the rooms stencilled by Nancy Clapp and filled with antiques.

Only one full-time firefighter (who had not signed the Vote of No Confidence in the Chief) attended.

Mariner deadlines

Residents are reminded of the Mariner copy deadlines. Pickups are made Friday and Monday and Tuesday at 9:30 a.m. All copy not delivered to the Mariner by noon Monday may not get into Wednesday's edition. It will depend on the size of the paper and time limitations.

Silver-haired legislators

Elections for this year's Silver-Haired Legislature are scheduled for Wednesday, Sept. 21.

The Silver-Haired Legislature is a group of 200 Massachusetts registered voters 60 years or older who are elected for one-year terms.

The legislators are trained to understand and utilize the legislative system, administrative process, community services and consumer rights, and return to their communities to share both with their elderly colleagues and their neighbors of all ages.

This program has been successful advocating legislation focusing on various elderly issues.

Nominations petitions are now available at the office of Representative Mary Jeanette Murray — Committee on Local Affairs Room 134 — State House, Boston, Massachusetts 02133.

The office phone number is 722-2400.

Jr. High Soccer

There will be junior high soccer teams this fall which will begin after school begins Sept. 7.

Dog killed in fire

A dog was killed and a Cohasset first floor was damaged in a fire Wednesday night at 55 Smith Place. Residents Dana and Mary Salvador were not at home at the time of the fire. The first floor of the small house was gutted and smoke and heat damage was extensive on the first floor. The cause of the fire has not been determined, said Fire Chief Martin Dooley.

The couple's mixed breed dog, "Spunky" was found dead on the first floor, apparently the victim of smoke inhalation. The fire was first spotted by two 14-year-old boys before 8 p.m. They immediately called the Fire Dept. from a neighbor's home.

Flames were shooting from three windows when firefighters arrived. Several firefighters received oxygen but there were no serious injuries. Neighors and children supplied pitchers of drinking water for the firefighters. Engines were sent from Scituate, Hingham and Hull to cover for the Cohasset equipment.

First female police officer named

Maureen Healy of Elm Street will become Cohasset's first female full-time police officer if she passes a three-month course at the Fall River Police Academy.

Selectmen approved her appointment and the appointment of John Conte, son of Police Officer Carmelo Conte last week.

Both appointments are effective Aug. 31 when both officers will enter the Fall River Police Academy.

These two appointments leave the Cohasset Police Dept. with essentially 16 full-time officers which Police Chief Joseph Kealey says is two less than the force before the approval of Proposition 2½.

The appointment of Officer Brian Cogill as the department's full-time detective means he will be out of uniform Sept.1 and not part of the minimum manning clauses in the union contact.

Cogill will be working on any type of investigation, Kealey said such as housebreaks, larcenies, vandalism and homicides.

Regarding the appointments, Kealey said he is happy with both selections.

"The appointment of a woman police officer is long overdue.I believe we are the last in the general area to have a full-time woman police officer," he said.

"I am happy we have someone who applied and has passed the Civil Service test. When she comes out of the academy she will assume all the duties of a full-time police officer."

Healy, 31, is a former auxiliary sergeant for the Cohasset Police Dept. She was employed as a police dispatcher for the Scituate Police Dept. for the past two years. Maureen graduated from Cohasset High School.

Conte, 26, graduated from Northeastern University with a degree in Criminal Justice. A CHS graduate, he recently worked as a security guard for the First National Bank of Boston.

State fines town $1,000 per day...

also feels he has the unequivocal support of two town meeting votes.

"Everyone (including selectmen) are aware of that and they are very supportive," said DeSantis.

Soon after the April annual town meeting, Town Counsel Richard Henderson ruled the actions of former Sewer Commission Chairman Joseph Gwinn illegal.

Henderson nullified Gwinn's action as former chairman to accept the $1.1 million grant.

In a letter written to Rogers April 14, Henderson said the acceptance of the grant by Gwinn had no validity.

Selectmen's Briefs...

TOWN WAY PROPOSAL

Selectmen agreed with a suggestion to block off Town Way pedestrian path to vehicles when apartment manager Robert Brocker read a letter from Town Way residents.

The letter proposed:

Motor vehicles pose a danger to pedestrians.

Motor vehicles cause damage to fences along Town Way.

Youths speed through at all hours.

Motor vehicles cause a noise problem.

Motor vehicle parking adjacent to phone booth parking blocks pedestrian traffic.

Selectmen said these reasons were valid. But before the proposal is put on the special town meeting agenda, they consulted Police Chief Joseph Kealey and Fire Chief Martin Dooley.

Both chiefs agreed. Dooley said, "If we left the path open in such a way that we could get the hoseline and ground ladders to the residents than it will be okay."

Selectmen plan to suggest three posts chained together with provision of a key to unlock chains for the Police and Fire Dep'ts.

STRAITS POND MEETING

Solutions to the Straits Pond odor to surrounding residents will be discussed at the Board of Health meeting Aug. 25, at 43 Elm St. at 7 p.m.

State Reclamation Board member Lewis Wells will discuss a possible copper sulphate solution.

State Biochemist Eleanor Valutkevich will give technical background on the problem.

Executive secretary Chris McCab, of Hull, will discuss plans for maintenance.

Cohasset Selectmen, Hull Selectmen and all pond abutters have been invited.

Selectmen submitted a petition stating complaints of a need for drainage on Ledgwood Drive to Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield.

Petitioners earlier asked selectmen to approve drainage before the winter when "flooding waters freeze and become treacherous to cars and pedestrians."

Selectmen will discuss this issue Wednesday night at 8 p.m.

LABOR COUNSEL SCREENING

Selectmen found an enthusiastic response of applications for labor counsel.

Town Counsel Rich Henderson said a lot of the applicants will be active labor counsellors.

Selectmen must narrow down the applicants to a few for interviews.

SKINNY'S LETTER

Acting selectman chairman Clifford Mitman read a letter from Landfill Supervisor Joseph "Skinny" Laugelle which said, "Please convey my deepest gratitude to those members of the Board of Selectmen who voted in my favor.

"You can rest assured that I shall continue to maintain the Cedar Street Landfill area with the equipment with which I have been provided to the best of my ability."

ICE CREAM TRUCK

Selectmen received an application by William Madden to operate an ice cream truck outside the Sandy Beach parking lot.

Discussion focused on where the ice cream truck would park. Many residents were concerned with danger to children if the truck parked on the busy street.

One resident recommended an out-of-the-way spot at the old entrance of the lot.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said, "It is late to apply for an ice cream truck permit for this summer. He would have to apply for next year."

Madden has received licenses from the Board of Health and a vendor's license from the state.

RESIGNATIONS

Selectmen accepted with regret the resignations of Walter Sullivan from the Conservation Commission and Chester Browne from the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission.

NO CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Board of Appeals member Myrna Putziger will be able to vote in the Cox Estate hearing because the board of selectmen waivered her conflict of interest.

Acting selectman chairman Clifford Mitman said, "I don't think owning a couple of lots on this property will effect her decision."

Warrant articles

A preliminary list of warrant articles for the Sept. 20 special town meeting has been accepted. The list includes repairs for the James Brook Bird Sanctuary, the Government Island Parking lot, payment of bills from prior fiscal years, repairs of the floodgates between James Brook and Cohasset Harbor, hiring of a town mason-maintenance man, and proposals to appoint a committee to study hiring a private ambulance service, and clarifying the procedure to pay benefits to part-time employees and a request for supplies for the Water Dept.

Dooley faces grievances, 16 criminal complaints

Fire Chief Martin Dooley is facing 16 criminal charges in addition to eight labor grievances heard by selectmen last week.

Firefighteres filed the criminal complaints against Dooley for refusal to pay them overtime for a special detail at the South Shore Music Circus.

The amount, nearly $2,000, is considered by selectmen and Executive Secretary Mark Lanza to be an issue at the Sept. 20 special town meeting. The amount, said Lanza, is an unpaid bill and should be paid for by the Music Circus.

Selectmen, Lanza said, feel Dooley is not at fault over the criminal complaints.

Dooley, on the advice of the state Fire Marshall sent six men and a Fire Dept. truck to the Music Circus beginning June 18.

After the Fire Dept. tested a sample of the theater rug, Dooley said the flammability test showed "a lighted cigarette would melt the carpet."

Dooley said a verbal agreement was made between Circus Director Ronald Rawson, Building Inspector Robert Dennis, Dooley and Capt. Mark Trask. Until the carpet was certified as safe, the Music Circus would pay for the Fire Dept. detail, Dooley said.

This, he said, was a verbal agreement and Rawson was to give him an agreement in writing. This was never done, Dooley said.

The work the men did ended June 30, the end of the 1982-83 Fiscal Year. There was no more money remaining in the overtime budget. As a result the $2,000 amount in back pay is an unpaid bill and subject to nine-tenths approval at town meeting.

GRIEVANCES

Within 20 days, selectmen are expected to reject or accept grievances filed by the union regarding Dooley's management practices.

Grievance committee chairman Randy Rosano and firefighter union president William Protulis presented grievances at Wednesday's selectmen's meeting.

Dooley explained why he did not believe that he had broken the union contract for each grievance.

The grievance of drilling during evening hours stirred the most response.

Rosana said, "It is unreasonable to train for two hours during the day and night. When I was a call man, the chief trained when it was convenient for everyone."

Selectman Frank England said, "You have already accepted the management practice of the chief when you accepted the previous chief setting the training times."

Dooley added, "The union said that if I put up a drill list than we should follow it."

The number of call men has dwindled from five to one since the evening drills were put into effect, Rosano said.

MUTUAL AID AGREEMENT WITH HULL

The grievance of changing mutual aid agreement with Hull raised several questions.

Dooley said, "Although Bill Protulis, Hull Fire Chief Robert Hollingshead,and myself were in agreement about this (agreement) at a meeting in May, I have put it on hold because of rumblings in the department."

Firefighter James Runey said, "Dooley failed to negotiate this with the men. Dooley wanted us to increase our workload by sending us to all of Hull's (box) fires."

Protulis, the only firefighter at the meeting, said, "I only said that it was all right with me."

Dooley said, "You speak for the local and I speak for the Fire Department."

Usually Cohasset would respond to the sixth box of the Green Hill station. Hull covers the northwest end boxes of Cohasset.

BELL CAPS

Dooley has the authority to change the style of formal dress caps to bell caps but firefighters argue that protective gloves should take priority over hats.

Dooley said he did not buy caps first because "The health and safety committee spoke to me (to request gloves). I asked what type they preferred. When I got no answer I purchased firecraft gloves and gave them to new men."

Firefighter Dick Conley said he had burned his hands because he, like other firefighters, had no gloves.

72 HOUR WRITTEN REQUEST

Dooley does not think that three days notice for who will work a shift is unreasonable.

Dooley said, "Notice for exchange of time (on a shift) gives me better control so I can better distribute the work load."

Selectman John DeBassio said, "Dooley's comment is perfectly justifiable."

Rosano inquired, "What about times when it is urgent to change shifts and we only have two hours notice?"

Dooley said, "I have not rejected anyone from a shift switch."

ILLNESS CERTIFICATE

Requiring a certificate of illness from a doctor can be expensive for a firefighter who may have the flu but how can the chief judge when someone is really sick?

Runey said, "I needed a doctor's note when I was only out for two days. Who is going to pay for the doctor? The (union) contract does not require a letter."

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said, "Anyone in charge can require a letter if they think you're faking sick. But they shouldn't make one pay $50 for a letter if they only have a sore throat."

FIRE PREVENTION OFFICER

The grievance committee wants the chief to keep Fire Prevention officer Mark Trask on regular shifts so everyone will be able to receive overtime pay.

Dooley said, "It is within the description of my management to utilize resources of personnel. I hired Capt.

ACTING CAPTAIN'S PAY

Dooley did not notify Runey that he would no longer be paid as an acting captain after December 31, 1982.

Runey reported to work as a captain to fill in for Captain Lincoln until January. He worked as a captain January 1, 2 and 3 but was not paid captain's pay.

England said, "I think we owe you three days' pay. There was poor procedure somewhere along the way."

CLOTHING ALLOWANCE

Firefighters are still opposed to receiving a clothing allowance in a lump sum.

Selectman DeBassio said, "The way things stand if a man is appointed even two days within the fiscal year then he will still get the allowance."

Dooley said, "This is solely the responsibility of the town accountant."

Mitman was applauded by the new 60-member audience when he said, "I think this was a poor way to go about the grievances — I think that you should've handled it differently."

Questions listed on Cemetery walking tour

By David Wadsworth
Cohasset Historical Society Curator

The Cohasset Historical Society concludes its series of three summer afternoon historical walking tours by meeting Sunday, August 28 at 3 p.m. at the Central Cemetery (corner of North Main St. and Joy Place), Cohasset.

Guides will include Norman Dresser of the Central Cemetery Association and David Wadsworth, Society Curator.

Following the tour of the cemetery will be a bus tour to several "Mystery-History" locations little known historical sites of early Cohasset.

Here are some questions and answers concerning the Central Cemetery tour.

Q. Early New England settlers reserved part of their land to use as cemeteries. By what name did they refer to their cemeteries, and where are Cohasset's early cemeteries located?

A. Early settlers called their cemeteries "Burying Grounds." Cohasset's old Burying Grounds are located at the Central Cemetery, at the North Cohasset (Green Gate) Cemetery, at Beechwood and at the small cemetery found midway on Cedar Street. All but the last named are incorporated within modern, larger cemeteries. The old Cedar Street burial ground is inactive.

Q. Whose burial marker is the oldest stone at Cohasset's Central Cemetery and what is the date shown on that stone?

A. The oldest stone at Central Cemetery is that of Margaret (Hardin) Tower, wife of Ibrook Tower. She lived from 1647 to 1705, and her husband Ibrook lived from circa 1643 to 1732. They were among the first settlers of Cohasset.

Q. Early New Englanders expressed their art and philosophy on their carved gravestones. What symbols were commonly used as decoration on the old slates used by the colonists?

A. Early gravestone art often used the following symbols: 1. the weeping willow, universal symbol of mourning; 2. the "Death's Head" or skull; 3. Angels of many types and appearances. Slightly later, the symbol of the lamb came to be used on the gravestones of children.

Q. What types of stone were commonly used for the making of cemetery markers in early New England Burial Grounds?

A. The earliest cemetery stones usually were made of bluish-gray slate. Later, white marble came into use, then granite. Many of the stones in the 19th and 20th century sections of Cohasset's Central Cemetery are Quincy granite, a dark gray type of stone often used for construction of buildings in this area. A few gravestones can be found made of pink granite, and occasionally, a local boulder of glacial origin is seen.

Q. Cohasset's Central Cemetery can be reached by a road named "Joy Place." What was the original name of that early way, and what is the origin of its present name?

A. Joy Place, in earliest Town records, was called simply "The road to the Burying Ground." It later was named for Capt. Joseph Joy (1783-1812), a Cohasset seafarer who lived across the street from the cemetery.

Q. Cohasset's worst sea disaster is commemorated in the Central Cemetery. What was the event commemorated and what marker records that tragic occasion?

A. October 7, 1849, the brig "St. John," a vessel of English registry, bound from Galway, Ireland, to Boston with a full complement of emigrants from Ireland, crashed into Cohasset's Grampus Ledge during a violent storm. Ninety-nine passengers and crew members died in the wreck of the "St. John."

May 30, 1914, the Ancient Order of Hibernians placed a large granite Celtic cross atop the Central Cemetery's highest hill in honor of the 47 victims of the "St. John" who were buried in a mass grave just below the hilltop.

Q. Early colonists often carved short poems upon their tombstones, reflective of their attitudes towards life and the life they believed would follow. What is perhaps the best known of these short verses, found on an old New England tombstone? (This may be a not-quite accurate rendering of it)...

A. "As I was you still are,
As I am you soon shall be,
Prepare yourself, my friends,
To follow me."

The new director of education at Jack Conway, Realtor in Hanover is Greg Boardman, 36, a former stockbroker, real estate entrepreneur, educator, and athletic coach.

This interest in finances and education is blended into one career as director of the Conway Country School of Real Estate.

Greg, who lived on Howard Gleason Road in Cohasset, is responsible for developing and coordinating curriculum for the Hanover-based real estate school. Since the school began in October, 1980, there have been 700 graduates.

After earning his real estate license in February, Greg joined the commercial section of Jack Conway, Realtor, in late March. He was named education director in July, although he remains active in the commercial investment business.

Greg Boardman

His interest in real estate began several years ago when he owned property in Florida. He has also purchased and renovated several South Shore homes which he later sold.

A member of the Mass. Board of Real Estate Appraisers, Greg is also a member of the New England Chapter of Real Estate Appraisers. Greg is a New England Chapter of Certified Commercial Investment Member (CCIM,) and is a member of the Plymouth Board of Realtors, and the Real Estate Securities and Syndication Institute.

A graduate of St. Lawrence University in New York, Greg later earned a master's degree in education, with a specialization in psychology. He also worked toward a Certificate of Advanced Study at Northeastern University.

Greg was employed as a stockbroker at Tucker Anthony and R.L. Day in Boston, and was assistant to the Dean of the International Student Office of Northeastern University. He was responsible for personal counseling and immigration advisement.

While at Northeastern University, Greg also coached the varsity ski team. He was a U.S. History instructor at Derby Academy in Saxtons River, Vt.

Although he lives in Duxbury, Greg grew up in Cohasset, adjacent to the Cohasset Yacht Club. His family were members of the club, an association which spurred his lifelong love of sailing and water skiing.

Greg, and his wife, Lynda, and two sons, Bill, 16, and Tom, 12, are the owners of an 18-foot racing sailboat, a Flying Scot, and race frequently in the Duxbury circuit.

☐Bonnie McClay of 352 Beechwood St., a sophomore in the School of Management has been named to the Dean's Honors List for the spring semester of the 1982-83 academic year at Suffolk University, Boston. In order to qualify for the Dean's List, a student must earn a grade point average of 3.0 or higher for that semester.

☐Marie Johnston of 120 Fairoaks Lane enrolled in the interior design program at Chamberlayne Junior College, Boston, for the fall semester. The department offers a three-year professional program which includes the associate degree. A professional certificate is awarded at the conclusion of the third year. Graduates of the program qualify as beginning professional designers and consultants.

Above are Jim Carroll, next to Jennifer Carroll and Kathleen Carroll.

☐The New England Broadcasting Association awarded its annual scholarships during a recent luncheon and one Cohasset youth received an honor. She is Jennifer Carroll, the first recipient of the John Malloy Memorial Scholarship. Jennifer, the daughter of Jim and Kathleen Carroll, is entering her junior year at Wheelock College in Boston where during the past semester she achieved a perfect 4.0 average. Jennifer was a member of the National Honor Society while at Cohasset High School.

Her major at Wheelock College is "Children in Health Care Settings" which is designed to prepare students to work with children who are ill. Jennifer is learning how to deal with children psychologically and to help them learn about their illness and to deal with any fears and apprehensions.

The John Malloy Memorial scholarship was named after the prominent Boston advertising executive and former treasurer and an active member of the NEBA. An asscociation release said Malloy loved children and "we know that he would welcome the opportunity of helping the daughter of a NEBA member whose career objective is to help children who are ill."

Water Commission rejects landfill article

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Water Commissioners unanimously agreed not to request as much as $100,000 to study the effects of Cohasset Heights Landfill, a private dump off Route 3A, on Lily Pond. .

The pond is near the town's water treatment plant.

At a special meeting Aug. 17, the commissioners went into executive session with Assistant Town Counsel John Slater.

The town already has a legal suit against Cohasset Heights, and Slater says he expects the case will be heard next month.

Slater said the court did not schedule any such civil trials in June, July or August, but he expects to be notified of the exact date in September. He said Cohasset Heights is under a court injunction.

Slater says he expects "the issue of possible drainage by Cohasset Heights into Brass Kettle Brook and Lily Pond will be addressed during the trial."

Both Slater and Water Commission Chairman William Montuori stress no full Environmental Impact Study (EIS) was done before the permits for the dump were issued by the state and town.

Montuori believes "someone" informed the state there will be no effect on the water supply in creating the dump in that location, and a statement of no significant impact may have been issued.

Montuori said that although he was previously a member of the Board of Health, Roger Pompeo had taken his place on that board at the time the private dump was approved.

Montuori says he is concerned about any possible effects the dump may have on the water supply 20 years from now.

The case presently pending against Cohasset Heights Landfill concerned the firm logging in the contents of loads being dumped, purchase of a scale, and conforming to board of health regulations.

Montuori believes someone in town waived the town collecting fees for loads originating from out of town, although he says state law requires payment of fees to the town. In his judgment, such laws cannot be waived.

The private dump was initiated by resident James Tyeryar.

According to Assistant Treasurer-Collector Nancy Snowdale, records show Tyerar paid $35,000 for the land, and slightly more than $15,000 back taxes and interest to the town when he purchased the property in 1975.

Taxes at that time were said to have been in arrears to the town for over 15 years, although the town never foreclosed on the property.

Tyeryar sold the property for $3.1 million to Cohasset Heights in 1982, according to the records.

Slater said according to published reports, BFI may have purchased an interest in Barry Bros., believed to be the owners of Cohasset Heights, Ltd.

Another town official reported BFI, the largest trash haulers in the U.S., may purchase the "rolling stock" (trucks) of Barry Bros., but not title to the land off Rte. 3A.

WATER PIPES WON'T BE REPLACED UNTIL SPRING

The water pipes from Margin Street to Cunningham Bridge on Atlantic Avenue will not be replaced until spring, since the town will not receive grant money in time to do the work this fall. These pipes are almost 100 years-old.

The water company had to repair three breaks in that section in the last three weeks - one at Whitehead, and two at 79 Atlantic Ave.

Replacement of the pipes is estimated to cost $442,000, with half of the money coming from a state grant.

However, the state will not release the money until they receive Cohasset's agreement to encourage building low income housing.

The agreement has been held up by Town Counsel, Richard Henderson.

Henderson says he wants to get definitions of some of the terms proposed by the state before forwarding the agreement. Selectmen have approved the agreement.

TOWN MEETING

The Water Dep't. will seek "$3,700 for grounds and maintenance" at the September special town meeting.

Tragic loss

A commmunity loses heart when it loses a child.

Cohasset lost three of her prize possessions when three small children, Andrea, Amy and Andrew Nardo, died in a tragic late Friday night fire.

Whether its at a zoning board, School Committee or at a selectmen's meeting, children are paramount in the eyes of Cohasset residents.

Words can't really express the sadness everyone feels about the deaths or the hurt to the Nardo parents, Eileen and Vincent Jr.

But there is something which was found in this heartbreaking event. That is the reaffirmation of a town's response to need.

This is represented by the Cohasset Rotary's Club emergency meeting and the establishment of a memorial family fund at the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank. The club contributed $1,000 to begin the fund.

We have heard throughout the community supportive words to the Nardos and praise for the firefighters who felt the most personal pain in the deaths of the children.

We have seen and heard the pain and frustration of Capt. Mark Trask who said firefighters crawled up the stairway and to the second floor only to greet smoke driving them back.

One can not help but share the frustration of being only 10 feet from the other bedroom where Andrea and Amy were.

The Mariner has published several reports of strife between Chief Martin Dooley and his men. A day earlier, Chief Dooley listened to eight grievances and 16 criminal complaints of failing to pay overtime to his men.

But Friday night, he was working alongside union President Billy Protulis. Both realized that differences had to be put aside for the sake of their duty to save lives.

The chief had nothing to say but praise for the firefighters. He acknowledged they had given their best.

It appears Fire was the Boss here and it always has been and always will be. All we can do is seek to protect children and ourselves through all avenues of safety.

To Eileen and Vincent Nardo Jr., our heart goes out to you. To you we offer our earnest sympathy for the loss of Andrea, Amy and Andrew.

Conversation with Studds...

him as nervous at these appearances. "I am not nervous," he said. "I'm having a ball. I enjoy the give and take of these open meetings."

The posture of self assurance seems genuine but it does not obscure the fact that Studds is deadly serious in his belief that his sexual preferences have nothing to do with his abilities as a congressman.

Consorting with a page, he acknowledges, was a most serious error, but "it wasn't an awesome abuse.". On the subject of homosexuality, however, Studds has worried about the "appropriate way to make the point of irrelevance.

"I feel incredibly strongly that whether I am a good, bad or indifferent congressman has nothing to do with my sexual preference."

Do you feel a special obligation to the gay community? he was asked.

"Yes," came the reply, "but my primary obligation is to represent the people of this distict. In my judgement both obligations are fulfilled in the same way—to be the best congressman possible.

"I am a congressman who happens to be gay. Basically, I am not going to change."

Several weeks ago in a Boston Globe interview, Studds was quoted as saying he had never met a homosexual until the age of 36. That statement was greeted with skepticism in several quarters. Was it true?

It was, he replied and offered this analogy: "As a heterosexual male, try to imagine yourself going into your 30s or 40s without ever meeting another heterosexual. There is just no acceptable way to meet gay people. And the situation I described as my own is to this day the situation for most gay people in this country."

Studds believes that although progress has been made in protecting gay civil rights over the past 10 years, "This society doesn't treat gay people fairly."

At the same time, he insists that the affair he had "10 long years ago" could not happen today. "The Gerry Studds of 1983 is a different person from 1973. The transformation is so fundamental, it's inconceivable that this could happen today."

Gerry Studds

Studds in the past has endorsed the idea that congressmen need not spend their lives on Capitol Hill. He has proposed legislation that would limit U.S. senators to three terms and House members to 12 terms (18 years) and he still supports those limits. He has served in the House since 1973 and will decide early next year on whether to run again.

"It will be a most personal decision," he said, and in making it, "it's just possible that for the first time, the tearing apart of the personal self and the public self may no longer exist . . . "

"If we do run again, it will be the first campaign I ever enjoyed."

It's about time daycare was discussed

To the Editor:

When I saw your article "Are You Happy About Your Daycare Arrangements?" in the Mariner (8/17/83), I was glad to see someone had finally brought the subject up. I often contemplated writing an article about daycare but, frankly, you could run a series for 52 weeks without covering the subject completely.

I am a 36 year old woman, a mother of three, and a nursery school teacher who will be starting day care in my home in Sept. I think I have hit the day care issue from both sides. I'm not only a person who has worked in the system but also a parent who's had to seek care for my children. The bad news is—I have not been happy about my daycare arrangements in the past and they have been haphazard, to say the least. Now for the good news—fortunately for my children, I have worked out a solution that allows me to be home to care for and support them, and since my long range career plans had included working in a field with children, this solution works out nicely for all of us. But I can't help but be plagued by questions that have affected me both as a parent and a day care provider. What happens to the children of those of us who are single or divorced or widowed working on a minimum wage salary? Who takes care of them when Mom can't afford daycare? Day care costs cut into a minimum wage earner's salary by a third to half. What happens when there are no families to support, friends to help or a neighbor who will put up with your child underfoot? In the past I've resorted to jobs at odd hours (3 a.m. to 7 a.m.) in order to avoid day care and its costs altogether. Yet the constant thought of 'what if the house burns down while I'm out' weighed heavy on me. I soon settled for a part-time job starting after school so I could hire high school kids. The costs only consumed a third of my salary and I was with my kids most of the time. I still was raising them and if the house caught on fire, I'd be there to do something about it. I later lucked out and my brother moved in with me. We traded babysitting and help around the house for room and board. Again I considered myself lucky. I had some resources to work with and I had family support.

As I move into the daycare provider's role and I interview prospective parents, I realize daycare problems come in all sorts of sizes and shapes. I see young parents of a new baby deal with the anxiety of working vs. staying home. How many hours, who's there for backup, the possible missing of the first word, the first step or just plain missing the child. Fortunately, I see a couple alternating and sharing the responsibility for the baby's care. I must say, I'm happy to see two people working out such constructive solutions, but two parents are the ideal and a lot of us aren't two but just one.

When I got married 15 years ago the normal career for women was to stay home and raise the children. I'm not sure when but someone changed all the rules, and the figures show that at least 50% of us have families, and have or are seeking careers. Even though I bless the opportunities, I curse the problems that have arrived. Things have changed fast and I often say—'why my generation?' 'Why do I have to straddle the fence?' It's not fair, but fair or not—it is! So who cares for the children? Who cares for the children of the lower-middle-class-but-not-quite-poor-enough for welfare group? Who? Does anyone notice there's a major crisis out there and is the change still too rapid for us to focus on it?

There are a lot of other questions that follow me and nag at me a lot more than I want to admit at times. What is good daycare? How can a parent tell what's right for his child? Should a child be in a daycare center or private home? In a center or home how can one tell if it's operating properly? What is the correct amount of time a child should be in daycare? How much can a parent afford to work? Is the government or big business really aware of the growing number of people who will need daycare services? These questions are only the beginning and we need answers a lot sooner than they will come. Unfortunately, the fact is there is not enough quality daycare for all the children who need it. There are not enough providers to go around. Too many parents get stuck with far less than is necesary for their child. What does this do to the child and what long term impact will it have on our country? The children are the future. How do we preserve it for them—ourselves? Does anyone realize the magnitude of the daycare crisis going on in this country?

Commentary: Studds meets constituents

By David A. Mittell, Jr.

Using wit and impeccable courtesy, Congressman Gerry Studds transformed the makings of a three-ring circus into an authentic discussion.

The occasion was Studds' first public appearance on the South Shore since his censure four weeks ago. The place was the Furnace Book School in Marshfield, the time last Wednesday evening.

In witness (in rough numbers) were 300 friends, 50 self-proclaimed opponents, 25 press, a custodian, and a cop.

By 6:45 the elements of a circus were in place. In the first ring, outside the school, signs held high and jaws thrust forward, were the anti-Studds picketers marching in a neat oval orbit about half the size of a tennis court.

In the second ring were Studds' friends, about 100 of whom deployed themselves five or six deep in a line along the side of the building—about 30 feet from the picketers, whom they eyed and made nervous jokes about.

In the third ring was the press, most comfortable with itself, least comfortable with the picketers, but ready en masse to follow any demonstrator punctuating the twilight with, "No Sodomy in Marshfield!" or like commentary.

The demonstrators were not to get their way, for at two minutes to 7:00 Studds strode upon the scene announced only by the darting eyes of a couple of aides. Demonstrators booed, supporters cheered and Studds beamed. Breaking stride only to let a couple of friends embrace him, he walked into the auditorium, booes and cheers and press scrambling after him like pet fish at feeding time.

Thus within seconds of the appointed hour did Gerry Studds pick up a microphone, and in his rich baritone, call the hall to order.

First he quieted his friends with a single downward hand signal. Then he quieted most of his opponents by saying, "I can hear you, but can you hear me?" (Laughter.)

Then he observed that this was his 17th such meeting in Marshfield and the 676th in his district in 10½ years. He said he was glad to see a good turnout in August, and glad moreover for the presence of television cameras. "We would have enjoyed having you before," he said. (More laughter, cheers, a few booes.)

After saying that most anything short of physical violence would be in order, Studds turned the meeting over to the questions and comments of the audience. He first recognized a woman who came to the podium with a speech to read, the burden of which was a quotation from the Bible (Leviticus 20:13): "If a man also lie with mankind, as he lieth with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination: they shall surely be put to death."

Studds' supporters erupted in a collective hiss. Studds took this speaker and this eruption, as he was to take every speaker and every eruption, with his hands folded behind his back. He told his friends to pipe down and he suggested to the woman that the same chapter of Leviticus forbids the eating of shellfish. "I read the Bible with some regularity," he went on, "and to the extent I recognize a pattern it is one of a God of love." (Ovation.)

Another woman came to the microphone with a passionate appreciation of Studds, man and Congressman. When she was done Studds said, "Well, I have to leave now!" (Laughter.) If Studds discouraged the passions of his opponents with courtesy, he controlled those of his friends with humor.

A man rose to ask about the Senate's recent vote to resume production of the agents of chemical warfare. Studds deplored it. Someone else asked about Chad. Studds approved of President Reagan's unwillingness to heavily involve the United states. He added that he cannot understand the President's inability to be "equally objective" about Central America.

While Studds was discoursing on Chad, a man in the front row would rejoin each point with, "Perhaps an immature adolescent could handle that!" Studds ignored the man awhile, then offered him a chance to speak in exchange for surcease until and after his turn. The man was shortly to break his word and resume his heckling. But the eye at the calm of the hurricane, that is Studds, had taken the wind out of him, as he had taken the wind out of most of those for him and against him who had come to the Furnace Brook School merely to blow hard.

It was not yet 7:30, but the question of who was to dominate this meeting was decided. It would be Studds. There would be further emotional testimonials and there would be others who would stand next to him at the microphone and tell him he is not fit to serve in Congress. But there would be no circus this night. One man's calm had assured that.

After 7:30 the majority of questions and comments were concerned with the issues of the day, not the issue of the moment. By 8:00 many of the anti-Studds people had left. The press, which had flocked to every heckler, began to have to content itself with listening.

Around 7:45 there was a question from the floor about the extent to which the Reagan Administration was gutting programs dealing with hunger in the United States. Studds answered that Republicans and Democrats in Congress are beginning to band together on this, as on other issues, to oppose the Reagan Administration.

Then he said, "I have heard a lot about morality tonight. I believe that what this Administration has done to programs that deal with hunger is immoral. It is singularly immoral that in the richest of all nations anyone should be going hungry."

For the first time, in this answer, there was tension in Studds' voice. He had treated the twin imposters opprobrium and approbation with detachment and good-natured disdain. But on the hunger issue, the passion came into this voice.

The passion left and the wit returned when a young man stood up wearing a straw hat crowned with a "Studds" bumper sticker. "Sir, I have reason to question your impartiality," Studds greeted him. (Laughter, followed by testimonial.)

But Studds' passion returned when the conversation turned to Central America, a subject on which he has nothing good to say about American policy.

"If we're going to subscribe to the domino theory, why on earth doesn't it occur to us to ask the dominoes?" he asked. "Why doesn't President Reagan ask the Mexicans why they're not scared. . . . I wish once I could wake up and find there was a revolution in the world in which my government took the side of the peasants."

Studds' emotion seemed ready to boil over on Central America. In a way this was odd, because he had done so good a job of controlling the crowd that by the time he warmed up to what for him was the passionate issues, the crowd—on both sides—had lost much of its own passion.

At 8:26 Studds indicated there would be time for only a couple more speakers. A confirmed friend got up and began discoursing on the history (mostly his own) of liberalism on the South Shore in the last 15 years. Studds had cut no one off all evening, but this speaker was interfering with his clear intention of ending the meeting, as it had begun, precisely on time. By the time he could muster himself to do the deed it was two minutes after 8:30. This was the closest he came all night to losing control of the meeting.

Studds saved a third instance of passion in his voice for his parting shot to the crowd. "Bless you," he said, "for speaking out loudly and clearly."

As the crowd filed quietly out, the press crowded around Studds, whose hands went back behind his back as inanities were asked. But no one asked if he had meant to "bless" those who had come to the Furnace Brook School to spit epithets in his face. They didn't ask because it was obvious from his respectful performance this remarkable evening that he had forgiven those who may never forgive him.

Even reporters could understand that.

A last look at long hair

By Claire McDonough

The end of an era has come. The last hold-out gave in. The days of wine and roses are officially gone. Tjark Kuehl had his hair cut.

Remember when our boys all had long hair? Remember how we hated it?

Oh, sure, we accepted their explanation about George Washington and other historic characters whose ears were never seen by mortal eye.

We believed them when they told us that men started cutting their hair, as they started shaving, so they could be more effective warriors.

If your enemy engages you in hand-to-hand combat, he's less apt to clobber you if you don't give him a handful of convenient hair he can hold you by while he does violent things to your jugular.

They told us that they wore their hair long to symbolize their peaceful natures, and we nodded.

Right, we agreed, and we hated it.

To us, somehow, they looked ferral rather than irenic. It was terribly easy to picture them hunkering around a campfire planning to cross the Alps on elephants and wipe out all known civilization.

They laughed, and told us that it was people with short haircuts who developed thermonuclear warheads. We knew they were correct, and we didn't believe it for a minute.

Still, there was a certain innocence in days of long hair. An earnest, if naive, belief that the "capitalist establishment" (how I came to hate those two words) had fouled things up—the environment, the economy, the social structure—almost to a point of no return.

It was fortunate, they assured us, their generation had come along, clear-sighted and loving, in time to bring salvation.

Too often we focused on the length of their hair and their inflammatory statements, and forgot that these were, in fact, our children. They were the products of our training, the recipients of ideals that we had given them. We forgot that they wanted the same things that we wanted—a world at peace, a social structure that embraced justice before profit, clean air and water.

Too often they focused on the length of our hair and our cautionary statements, and they forgot the same things. The generation gap gaped.

One after another, our boys had to earn a living. For most of them the career of rock star, if not attainable, was still a possibility for a full-time job. Most traditional employers were less than enchanted by long hair.

One after another, they got hair cuts. Somewhat embarassed by this small by symbolic compromise with reality, each checked his reflection in the mirror and found that it was good.

Tjark was the last of my sons' friends to give in.

"Are you going to write about me in the paper, Mrs. McDonough?" he asked, just a little shyly.

I told him I would, then I felt a tiny tinge of regret. I realized, of course that their ideals, though tempered by practicality, remained unchanged. But did I mourn, if only briefly, the end of an age of innocence, of altruism untouched by practicality? I did.

Did I wish they would all let their hair grow long again? Nope. I most certainly did not. Not for one single minute.

Voke-Tech asks Cohasset for town meeting money

By Theresa Sullivan

The South Shore Vocational Technical School is asking its member towns to give the school the money that town meetings approved in all towns except Hanover.

Supt. and Director of VoTech Dr. Clifford Easton said new legislation allotted local aid to the individual towns rather than directly to VoTech as it has done in the past. Therefore, VoTech is short $65,844 it had included in the school's Fiscal Year 1983-84 budget, he said.

Legally, the communities are not required to return any of the money Easton is asking for. "I think the issue is perhaps a moral one," Easton said.

In answer to a question from Hanson's Bruce Young, selectmen chairman Easton said he would cut one teacher, yet to be hired, a cosmotology program yet to begin and $25,000 to $35,000 worth of equipment if his request is denied.

"We have not bought any equipment for new programs or old programs for three years," he said.

Hanover selectman Janet O'Brien said she supports vocational education, but "when we are all cutting (budgets), you are looking at expanding programs."

Easton said the new programs are revenue-producing and will help channel funds back into the school in two or three years. He said they plan to open a restaurant and bakery and work in the areas of decorating, painting and graphic arts to both learn and earn money.

Hanover selectmen chairman Fred Briggs explained why Hanover town meeting voted against the aid to VoTech last spring. "It was a symbolic vote, in keeping with Prop. 2½," he said. "We're not asking you to do what we didn't ask our other departments to do."

In response to repeated suggestions that the VoTech administration "tighten its belts," Easton said the administration "has not only tightened its belt; it has stopped eating. We're dealing with a budget that was already bare bones to begin with.

"It's very hard in a vocational school to cut a program when a kid is going to be a senior next year," Easton said. It affects a student career-wise, because he has invested time into a program but will not be able to complete it," he said.

VoTech School Committee member Richard Silvia, the Cohasset representative, said, "The real problem that I see is that we've already been hurt. There's nothing left to cut." He said in order to produce revenue, they have to invest money in the program initially. He said the culinary arts students are at a point where they can start making money, but they can't without equipment.

VoTech is requesting $8,356 from Hanover, $8,072 from Scituate, $6,229 from Norwell and $988 from Cohasset, as well as funds from four other towns in the region. The following is the amount of aid each town would have remaining, if they voted to give the above-mentioned sums to VoTech: Hanover, $23,023; Scituate, $22,243; Norwell, $17,172; and Cohasset, $2,735.

Whether or not VoTech receives the requested money is up to the selectmen in each town. A majority vote by at least six of the eight member towns is necessary to approve the request. All votes must be taken by September 30.

Norwell representatives attending the meeting were Terence Finan, executive secretary, Jim Daley and Hank McCleary, each on the advisory board.

There were no Scituate representatives.

Service to commuter boat

A bus company has announced plans to run a service between Marshfield and the Hingham commuter boat dock.

South Shore Bus Company says that should start this fall, using Rte. 3A as its highway. State permits for the transportation service must precede such service, however, and hearings will be scheduled once application is made.

Cohasset mourns Nardo loss...

The rest of the house was undamaged except for smoke and water.

Dooley ruled out smoking as a cause of the fire because neither Vincent or Eileen Nardo smoked.

The Nardo family is well respected in town and are known as very nice and friendly people.

The couple has been married for six years and lived about four years in the light brown house.

The parents were still under sedation Monday and are still taking the deaths very hard. Sawchuck said even though Vincent is not a member of the Rotary, the club wants to help the couple in any way.

Contributions may be sent to the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, 48 South Main St., Cohasset. Donations may also be made to the Cohasset Community Nursing School Fund, 3 No. Main St.

Capt. Mark Trask was the commanding officer on the night shift. Dooley said he and the firefighters who responded did an admirable job in tough circumstances. Dooley was also pleased with the turnout of the department's call force.

There is no doubt the firefighters were affected by Friday night's nightmare.

Dooley plans to talk with the men who fought the fire when they come on the day shift. Dooley wants the men to critique the firefighting operation.

One town official who asked not to be identified said all the cliches which have been mentioned in the media are all true.

One resident said, "The feelings of Cohasset residents are ones of shock and grief. People are putting themselves in the same position. The Nardos have lost a whole family and their lifestyle has immediately changed. It's tough to come home to see toys and clothes. It's an empty feeling."

Need we say this is a photo of champions. That's the Jamie's Pub squad which whipped Bread Board to seize the summer softball league championship for the third year in a row.

By Cindi Bondi

Jamie's Pub defended their third year title as the Cohasset-Scituate Men's Softball League champs by winning their third game, 11-4, against the Bread Board Friday.

Jamie's won a close ten inning game, 7-6. They played the first five innings on Wednesday and resumed with the remaining five innings when they had more daylight on Thursday. When Friday's game began both teams fought hard for a lead.

The Bread Board's Tim Farrell and Martin Stearns led off with singles. Ken Scott doubled with two RBI's to bring the score to 3-2. Richard (Wally) Jenkins later singled, stole two bases and dove into the plate to score.

Jamie's broke the 3-3 tie in the third and never looked back. Bob O'Meara doubled and stole home for a 4-3 score. Joe Gamen and Lou Ricci's runs brought them to 6-3.

The Bread Board attempted to start a rally. Jenkins and Scott both had hits. Rick Roaches single sent Jenkins home.

Jamie's bombarded them with insurance runs and held them at four. Marty McGinn had an almost grand slam when he sent Jim Clifford, Mike Mahoney and O'Meara home. McGinn came home on a sacrifice fly by John Ganen.

Clifford scored in the last inning to boost Jamie's victory 11-4.

The Bread Board crept ahead 2-0 in the first game inning. Ken Scott and Tim Farrell scored on single RBI's by Mike Horan and Brian Bates. Jamie's retaliated with a 1,2,3 inning when the Bread Board returned to bat.

Jamie's scored two runs to match the Bread Board 2-2 in the third inning. Habby Gervis wound up on third after a double error play, while Jim Clifford scored. Gervis scored on Dan Sides double.

Jamie's kept chipping away as George Russo doubled. Tony Banco scored and knocked in Russo to break the tie, 4-2.

The Bread Board attempted to start a rally with singles by Martin Stearns and Ed Foynes. But Jamie's defense was tight.

John Gamen's double administered the final blow when he sent Lou Ricci home to end the game 5-2.

Obituaries

The death of Beth Hitchcock, 80, August 17, ended a 16-year association with the Peace Corps.

Hitchcock served as a Peace Corps volunteer in Afghanistan from 1967 to 1969.

During the following two years, she worked as a Peace Corps recruiter in the Boston Recruiting Office.

From 1971 through 1973 she served again as a volunteer in Liberia, West Africa. After two years in Liberia, she rejoined the Boston Recruiting Office staff and worked to represent Peace Corps to older Americans, teachers, and other special groups until shortly before her death.

A native of Connecticut, and a graduate of Oberlin College in Ohio, Hitchcock taught school for 39 years in various parts of the country including New York, California and Wisconsin.

She retired from teaching in 1967 prior to joining the Peace Corps.

Hitchcock also spent several years with the Marine Corps, and served as company commander at Camp Pendleton in San Diego. She also raised eight foster children.

Hitchcock published two books, "Zest for Quest, a Peace Corps Experience," and "Off Your Rocker (A Lighthearted Philosophy for Older Americans.)"

Hitchcock leaves a sister, Louise, Ithaca, N.Y.; two nieces, Barbara George, Middlesex, N.J., and Elizabeth Anderson, Gibsonia, PA; a nephew, Bob Hitchcock, Binghamton, N.Y.; and two foster daughters, Liz Dale and Margaret Baier.

Memorial services will be held for Hitchcock at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset, at 9:30 a.m., Saturday, Aug. 27.

State of the art - for non corporate excellence

By Lois Martin

It was a year ago May I first heard the phrase. It rolled off the tongues of AT&T's top guns, who were armed with electronic language with which to address members of the media.

State of the art, they said. I sense I should capitalize "Art" 'cause I know it's important. I longed to nudge a colleague, raise my right brow and mouth questioningly, "What is State of the Art?"

I didn't do that becaue I'd have been the only self-announced dimwit in the group. Everyone else seemed perfectly comfortable with repeated use of that phrase.

Corporations and bureaucracies often anoint the English language with in-house stuff.

And that May I was still marveling at the use of parameters, which had found popular redundancy in the Selectmen's office.

Now, 15 months into my State of the Art study, I think I've got it. Here's how I'd like to see it applied.

— State of the art Sox. We almost had that a couple times. But if we can't get that team, could we have a state of the art manager or even a sportscaster. No, Ken Coleman isn't it. A sportscaster ought to develop into a personality who could be a game time unto himself. Johnny Most is one of those.

— State of the art baby. I've seen lots of them. I mention them only because if we're going to tease for things, we ought to note goods we already have. And you can't beat a state of the art baby in two instances. First when it's yours and you're still amazed . . . and second, when you're in the enriching 40s and it's not yours.

— State of the art sub. That would be steak, with onions sloshed in real butter, and mushrooms, a spray of seasonings, topped with melted cheese and more mayonnaise than is good for you.

— State of the art Rte. 3. You and I know this is not a reasonable goal. But I never considered state of the art too reasonable an expression to begin with.

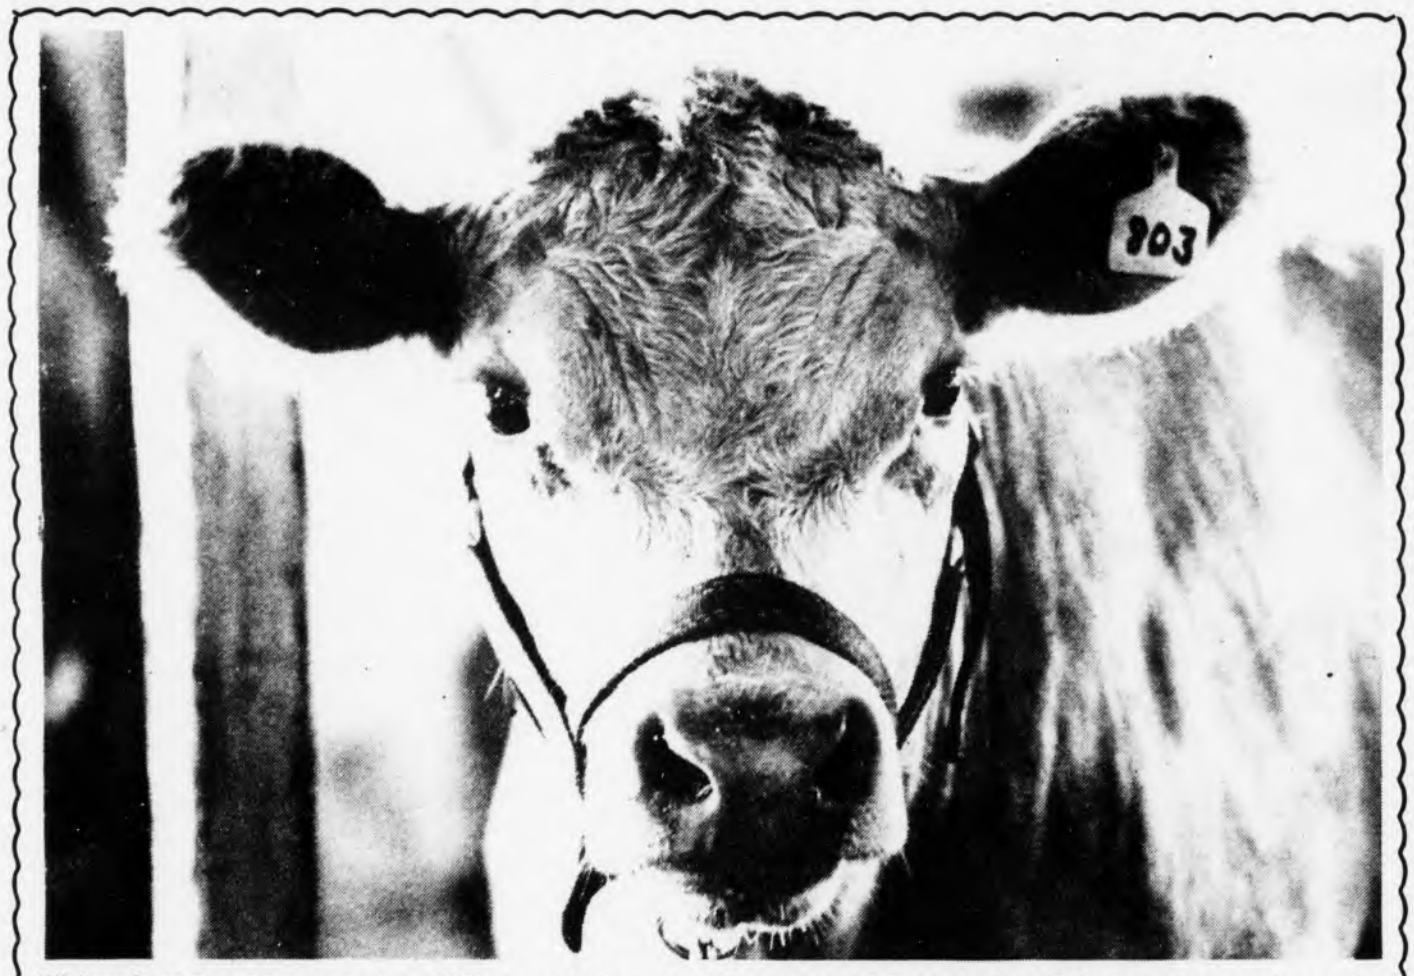
— State of the art winter. That would be a cold snap to justify complaints of New England winters, one overwhelming snowstorm, lights out a while and all that, to revive the annual pioneer spirit and memories of '78, roads good enough to get by on but bad enough occasionally to excuse someone who doesn't want to go out of the house. And we clearly have had State of the art summer days.

— State of the art dustcloth. I'm tempted to add screwdriver, vacuum cleaner and liquid Ajax. That would be greedy. The perfect dustcloth, though, does it itself without breaking.

— State of the art politician. I know, I know. But let's go for it anyway.

— State of the art yard sale. That's when you find stuff that looks better than yours, at a steal.

— State of the art paint remover. This may not seem a matter of top priority but you'd think so if it were on your good black skirt.



— State of the art clambake. The layers of vegetables, seafood and seaweed isn't nearly so important as the people eating it. Actually it's the State of the art crowd I'm referring to.

— State of the art parade. Last time I saw one I was playing clarinet, a John Phillips Sousa something, and the only deterrent to its perfection was that our band was marching directly behind the mounted policemen. State of the art maneuvering.

— State of the art parent. There's a challenge.

— State of the art peace. That would be wonderful. No more talk of Chad, Central or South America except for its culture, people and products, no hidden threats behind routine mandates to sign up for the draft.

— State of the art night out. I want one of those, state of the art cucumber in my salad, state of the art music to dance to...state of the art friends to share it.

This winsome cow, number 803, is a 4-H entry in the Marshfield Fair which continues through Sunday, Aug. 28 at the Rte. 3A fairgrounds. Animals, exhibitions, rides, races, something for everyone.

from the kitchen

Joan Pinkham

(Joan Pinkham's on vacation this week, away from her kitchen, so to speak. Terri Long of the Mariner staff is the guest columnist. A genuine Southerner, Terri hands along these recipes as delicious samples of a Southern Summer Kitchen. Ed.)

By Terri Long

Dining doesn't always occur in the kitchen. In Louisiana, my home state, it's common to eat on a gas-lit patio and experience the delicacy of real Creole cooking; raw oysters, fresh French bread, Crawfish Bisque and Shrimp Remoulade.

REMOULADE SAUCE

4 T lemon juice
4 T vinegar
4 T prepared "Creole" mustard (substitute with spicy mustard)
4 T prepared horseradish
2 T salt
1/2 T black pepper
2 T paprika
Dash cayenne
2 T catsup (optional)
1 c. salad oil
1/2 c. celery, chopped fine
1/2 c. green onions, minced

Combine lemon juice, vinegar (tarragan, if you have it) and seasonings. Gradually add oil. Stir with fork or rotary beater to blend well. Add celery and onion. Makes 2 cups. Serve over iced shrimp on a bed of lettuce.

Connie Neelon has been a New Englander for two months, having moved here from Houston. Seems she and I both married Yanks. (They love our cooking!) Connie, as an alternative to what we all know and love as Texas B-B-Que has come up with Tex-Mex at its best. I know ya'll can't wait to try Connie's

TACO BURGERS

1 envelope Lipton onion soup mix
2 lbs. ground beef
1/2 c. chopped green pepper
1 tomato, chopped
1 T chili powder
6 Flour Tortillas or Taco Shells
Shredded lettuce

Combine soup with meat and add green pepper, tomato and chili powder. Shape into 6 large weiner-type rolls and grill or broil until done. Wrap in tortillas which have been fried to the shape of a taco shell or use purchased shells. Top with shredded lettuce.

And what does the average Texan eat with Taco Burgers? As Connie says, "For a great family meal everybody loves," you make

MEXICAN CORN SALAD

2 cans (Libby's) Mexican corn
1 medium tomato, chopped
1 medium cucumber, chopped
1 small bunch green onions
1 6-oz. bag radishes, sliced
1/2 c. bottled Catalina French dressing

Combine ingredients and refrigerate before serving. Best if left over night.

Down in Georgia, if you had walked with Patty Cole around her back yard, you would have gone slowly, picking and cracking and eating as you walked — pecans that is! "We would sit on the porch cracking them at night," Patty says. "When we had enough Mama would make..."

GEORGIA PECAN PIE

3 eggs
2 T melted butter or margarine
2 T flour
1/4 tsp. vanilla
1/2 c. sugar
1/8 tsp. salt
1½ c. dark Karo syrup
1½ c. broken pecans
1 unbaked 8" pie shell

Beat eggs, blend in melted butter, flour, vanilla, salt, sugar and syrup. Sprinkle nuts over bottom of pie shell. Gently pour mixture over nuts and bake in a hot oven 10 minutes at 425 degrees. Reduce heat to 325 and bake about 40 minutes more.

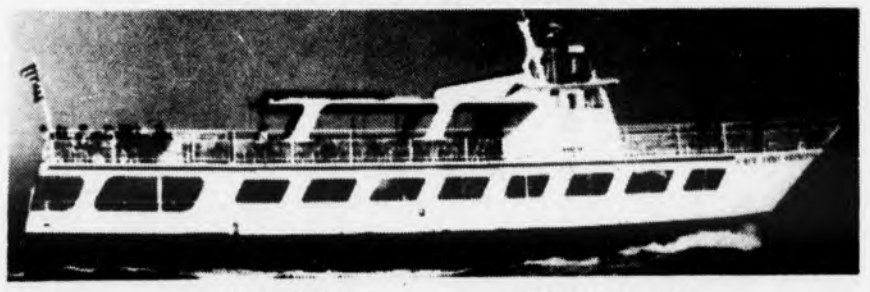
* * *

Patty's mother-in-law, Vivian Cole, just happens to be in Marshfield visiting with her son and family. This lady comes straight from Alabama and says, "People think the only way Southerners eat chicken is fried." Just to disprove that theory she'd like everyone to sample her delicious

POPPY SEED CHICKEN

6 chicken breasts, deboned
2 cans cream of chicken soup
1 or 2 small cartons sour cream
1 pkg. Ritz crackers, crushed
Poppy seeds
Butter

Boil or broil chicken and debone. Put chicken into bottom of casserole. Next pour mixed sour cream and soup over chicken. Cover with crushed crackers, dab a little butter on top and sprinkle with poppy seeds. Bake at 350 degrees until it bubbles.



Joan will be back next week with more goodies From the Kitchen.

At right, Plymouth County Junior Golf Championship Division winners receive awards from Jack Conway, president of Plymouth County Development Council. A Beautiful Approach to Country Living.

You drive in through meadows strewn with seasonal wildflowers. But that's only your entry to the good life at The Meadows, The Green Company's new community of attached single family homes in Hingham. The architectural style is true to the farm-house heritage of the community. The construction and detailing have been accomplished with obvious pride.

The Meadows offers a selection of two and three bedroom homes with unexpected details like master suites with private fireplaced sitting areas, large country kitchens for informal entertaining, separate dining rooms for more formal occasions, hidden corners for quiet contemplation, and a mix of ceiling heights and styles. In addition there are large private courtyards, two-car garages, full basements, a swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. And best of all, this very civilized lifestyle is near major highways to the cultural delights of Boston and vacation areas to the North and South.

Prices range from $157,000 to $210,000 during this, our opening period. Furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street, one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment. When it comes to a good life in the country, The Meadows leads the field!

Which town ?

Susan Killhea asked selectmen for a liquor permit for a Cohasset Harbor Yacht Club party at Bassing Beach until she found out she was asking the wrong board of selectmen.

After selectmen took out a map they confirmed that Bassing Beach is in Scituate.

Killhea said that the party went smoothly last weekend. They had no trouble transporting beer and wine by boat to the Bassing Beach party site.

However, she said parties were easier to organize when one permit was granted for the entire summer.

The secret birth defect... Spina bifida

By Theresa Sullivan

Every hour, every day, somewhere in the United States, a child is born with spina bifida.

Spina bifida is the single most common disabling birth defect of the newborn child.

There are children with spina bifida across the country, including the South Shore. Some families join the Mass. Spina Bifida Association as a way of sharing the experience with others who have been through it.

Local members of MSBA include three Marshfield families, three Scituate families, one Norwell family and one Hanover family. There is a probability of there being at least one child or adult in every town with spina bifida, though they may not join MSBA.

Spina bifida is five times more common than Multiple Sclerosis and seven times more common than Muscular Dystrophy.

This birth defect is also known as myelodysplasia, and occurs once in every thousand live births.

Spina bifida is rarely heard of because 30 years ago, 90 percent of newborns with spina bifida died of complications. Today, with aggressive medical care, almost 90 percent of those with spina bifida can live.

Rachel Paolucci, 6, of Scituate, is outgoing, affectionate and alert. She has spina bifida, but that's the only factor that makes her any different from other children.

"I caught a toad once; and you know what? He croaked." This is one of the first of many endearing statements Rachel made to the person interviewing her

"Want to see my muscles?" she asked. They were quite impressive for a six-year-old. "You know what really helps? Spinach."

Rachel's arm muscles are strong because she relies on them constantly. Her legs are paralyzed from the knees down and she needs crutches and braces to walk. She's also pretty speedy when she pulls herself round on the floor with her arms.

When Rachel was born, she had no hips, her mother, Ann, said. Her knees bent the opposite way than is normal and she was clubfooted, Ann said. Rachel has undergone corrective surgery and now has normally shaped legs and feet.

Rachel Paolucci

Rachel is required to wear braces which extend from her knees to her feet. She sleeps in a plastic brace every night which is custom-fitted from her hips to her feet and covers the back part of her body.

Rachel made a face when she was asked about the night brace. Her mother said she doesn't like it because she can only sleep on her back.

But Rachel didn't want to talk about any of this. She talked about the chores she does. "I have a high-chair. I kneel on that. I wash the dishes and put them in the drainer."

She also vacuums by crawling on the floor. Ann said Rachel also likes to clean windows, which she does from her stool.

Meridith Grip of Scituate is the mother of 6-year-old Leah who has spina bifida. Meridith and her husband Jim are active in the Mass. Spina Bifida Association. Meridith tried to explain the meaning of spina bifida in as many non-medical terms as possible.

A child with spina bifida is born with a whole in his back, she said. The bones do not come together as they should, and therefore paralysis of the lower body is common. Most are paralyzed from the waste down, she said.

Usually, the muscles and nerves in the lower body are weak or ineffective. This includes the muscles for controlling the bladder and rectum. Most spina bifida patients see a urologist, she said.

Some children wear diapers and in other cases they can control their bladder with medication and catheterization. This is a simple process of emptying one's bladder of urine.

A child with spina bifida is usually born with a collapsed, fluid-containing sac protruding from the lower part of the back. This is called a myelomeningocele.

On the first or second day of life, an operation will be performed to remove the myelomeningocele. This is done to prevent infection and preserve whatever nerves and muscles the child has at birth.

Most children are born with hydrocephalus or develop it as a result of the operation on their backs. Hydrocephalus is an accumulation of fluid on the brain. This sometimes causes the head to become enlarged and can eventually cause brain damage if untreated.

Hydrocephalus is treated with another operation. A shunt, which is a tube made of material similar to rubber, is placed in the child, beneath the skin. The shunt's purpose is to keep spinal fluids away from the brain. The shunt channels fluids to the abdomen where they are absorbed safely.

Meridith said, 85 to 95 percent of the children with spina bifida need a shunt. A shunt "is why kids no longer die," she said.

Meridith said she knows of a psychologist and a nursing student with spina bifida. People used to think children with spina bifida were retarded but because of the shunt, some 80 percent of the kids have normal intelligence, she said.

Spina bifida is frequently referred to as "the secret birth defect." This year, for the first time, the month of October is designated National Spina Bifida Month. Last year the Spina Bifida Association of America held a National Spina Bifida Week for the first time.

The second part of this two-part series will feature Matt Woodbury, an older child with spina bifida.

Controversial ambulance bill doesn't make T.M. warrant

By Mike Berger

Probably the most controversial article for the Sept. 20 special town meeting won't make the warrant.

That article, sponsored by callfighter Bernard Salvador, asks for a full study of a private ambulance service.

Wednesday, Aug. 24, selectmen decided to appoint a special committee to investigate the issue. Committee members have not yet been appointed

Salvador said he presented the petition with 250 signatures to selectmen because he is tired of excessive spending in the Fire Dept.

He predicts the town could save as much as $150,000 with an excellent quality of service from a private ambulance company.

Salvador feels the callmen aren't appreciated by the permanent firefighters even though the callmen are under civil service regulations. He said the permanent men don't want the callmen to man the front desk or operate equipment.

Salvador said one private ambulance, company, "Metro" will answer all box alarms, answer mutual aid calls and transport injured people to the hospital. "In fact, you can write whatever service you want into the contract," Salvador said.

Currently on every ambulance or emergency medical call, the town ambulance sends two E.M.T's and an engine with two men. This leaves two men at the station.

The idea of a private ambulance service is not popular with the firefighters. Acting Captain Dick Conley said, "If you hired an ambulance service you would lay off eight firefighters who are skilled in every phase of the Fire Dept."

Town Meeting articles

Selectmen discussed which warrant articles will be accepted to appear on the agenda.

Selectman Frank England said, "If we are appropriating $55,000 for bills then we should give taxpayers a list of why."

Selectmen Chairman Mary Jane McArthur agreed, "We have never put articles in the warrant to pay bills with tax dollars without listing them individually ."

Selectmen recommended a handout of unpaid bills at town meeting.It is estimated about $55,000 will be needed to pay past bills.

Other town meeting articles are:

The Board of Health will sponsor an article to transfer respnsibility for operation and management of the landfill to selectmen. This came as a result of the selectmen's decision to back Joe Laugelle, landfill supervisor, in a grievance filed by the health board.

Another article asks to repair the flood gate from James Brook into Cohasset Harbor which will cost $800.

A cost was not determined for cement posts to close off Town Way, the narrow path leading from South Main Street to the municipal parking lot.

Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield proposed an article calling for the appropriation or transfer of $2,000 for a work zone protection kit which are highway cones

Capt. Trask doubles as fire prevention officer

By Cindi Bondi

Mark Trask keeps up his dual position of Fire Prevention Officer and Captain by budgeting his time.

Trask said he receives help for his dual position. He said, "The men on this shift are self-motivated and able to take care of the department and station without direct supervision. Sixty percent of the time I am doing inspections or paperwork for fire prevention."

During an inspection Friday at the Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home, Trask was called to a forest fire. The other firefighters already had two trucks there and the fire was under control. Trask returned to the nursing home to complete the inspection and a demonstration.

The two jobs constantly conflict, Trask said. He had attempted to do the nursing home inspection last week but he was interrupted by a fire call. He was unable to finish the inspection so he had to begin again August 26.

Each building should be inspected once a year. Cohasset is a small town but there are still enough buildings to require a daily inspection schedule. "I have inspections and office work during every shift. The work load is enormous. The fire prevention officer should be a full-time position.

The FPO has many responsibilities. The main function of the FPO is to get fire safety messages across to the public.

Trask said, "We don't just tell someone that they are in violation of fire laws, the important thing is to explain

The Old Goats carry on . . .

The "Old Goats" recently convened at a monthly meeting at Hugo's Restaurant.

By Moira McCarthy

In Cohasset, being called an Old Goat is far from derogatory. In fact, there's a waiting list of men hoping to someday be called just that.

The Old Goats is a club of 35 retired men who meet twice a month to just plain relax.

"Most of our members are tremendously involved in community activity," the president of the club, who along with the other 34 members humbly asked to remain nameless, said. "We all have our own things that we do. So being together is a great way to get away from it and relax."

There are a few requirements to become one of the lucky 35 that meets at Hugo's twice a month. One must be retired, a resident of Cohasset, and sponsored by another member.

When a vacancy opens up in the club, the person who has been on the waiting list the longest is selected to join. Right now, there are six men on the waiting list.

Although it is not a requirement, all the Old Goats are vivacious and successful men.

"We have bankers, state department workers, college professors, successful businessmen, and many others. One of our members has been a resident of Cohasset for 97 years, and another one has only been a resident for six years."

But when they all get together, they find a lot in common to talk about. Sometimes they have guest speakers, other times the Goats themselves speak on subjects from the Red Sox, to the Mideast crisis, to someone's recent vacation.

"We like to do our own thing, Many times we all just voice off."

The 35 men gather around a table at Hugo's, and look out over their hometown harbor while they chat and enjoy lunch. This may seem a little selfish, the president said, but even dedicated workers need a few hours to themselves to just relax and have fun. They all are dedicated citizens.

The president added for many of the members of the club, the first and third Friday meetings are a big happening to look forward to in their week. "We really enjoy each other's company," he added.

"Basically, we're just there to have some fun. We enjoy being together. When we're out, we're doing things for the church, or the community, or charity organizations. Our club is a refuge from the community for us. We're taking a few hours a month for ourselves, and we enjoy it."

Music Circus liquor license denied

The Appeals Board has denied the application of South Shore Music Circus to serve wines and malt beverages.

In a written decision filed with the town clerk Aug. 18, the board determined the service of alcoholic beverages is "substantially different in character from the service of non-alcoholic beverages."

The board is concerned over the management control over alcoholic beverages and the subsequent driving habits of motorists leaving the Music Circus.

Board members Chairman Robert Booth, John Roy and Myra Putziger determined there is a "difference in effect upon the patrons of the consumption of alcoholic beverages."

Music Circus Director Ronald Rawson applied to serve champagne citing the need for increased revenues and added the champagne would serve as an "additional amenity enhancing the pleasure of a visit to the Music Circus."

Appeals board members said their role was to evaluate the impact on the immediate surrounding

Private boat law

Each person's boat is his private property, and should be treated accordingly, said selectmen in a press release. State law makes it illegal to board another person's boat or vessel without the permission of the owner. There is a fine of $50 on violators.

It would be appreciated if parents and children follow the law.

Fire investigation continues

The state Fire Marshal's office and the Fire Dept. continue to investigate the cause of a fire on North Main Street, Aug. 19 which killed three children, Amy, Andrew and Andrea Nardo. Fire Chief Martin Dooley has ruled out foul play as a cause of the fire.

MDA Drive Launched

The Cohasset Permanent Firefighters Local 2804 will conduct their annual Muscular Dystrophy Fund Drive this week. Firefighters will be stationed at the Stop & Shop Supermarket, Rte. 3A and at the Town Disposal Area, Cedar Street from Thursday through Sunday. Firefighters are hoping to exceed last year's fundraising effort and contributions will be greatly appreciated. The final total collection will be announced on "The Telethon, Labor Day Weekend." For further questions, call firefighters Bill Litchfield or Jay Fiori at Fire Dept. headquarters, 383-0260.

Early deadline

This is it, the end of the summer to be marked by Labor Day weekend.

This major holiday makes a difference in the Mariner deadline. Advertising and news copy should be at the office (58 Main St. or Box 682, Marshfield 02050) by 2 p.m. Friday.

The Mariner will be published the same day as always but the early deadline gives staff members a chance not to labor on Labor Day.

neighborhood to the Music Circus.

Although the board deteremined patrons arrive in daylight and over a period of time, "there is a mass exodus of automobiles in the dark from the parking lot at the conclusion of the performances."

"This board is not persuaded that sufficient management control of the number of times any given patron is served can be imposed when service is being provided in a short period of time to hundreds of impatient patrons."

"While not an exact parallel, the stories of overconsumption at Sullivan Stadium during halftime at football games form some analogy to the situation suggested by the applicant."

"Therefore it is possible that the people who will operate motor vehicles departing from the Music Circus will have consumed substantial amounts of beer and wine within an hour of their departure by motor vehicle.

"This board believes that it is an inescapable conclusion that the possibility of a significant number of drivers operating under the influence of alcoholic beverages as they depart from the Music Circus is substantially more detrimental than current conditions to the neighborhoods surrounding the Music Circus and to the town in general."

Trask doubles as fire prevention officer

why and how fires should be prevented."

Specifically, the FPO "covers every business building that exists by making sure the plans meet the fire codes and they adhere to fire codes," said Trask.

Trask continued, "Smoke alarms are the biggest step in fire direction."

The law requires all new constructions to have smoke alarms since 1975. Buildings should have alarms on the ceiling — at the base of each stairway, in each sleeping area (group of bedrooms), and on each level of a building.

Ninety-six percent of all fires are put out by sprinkler systems which are also inspected by Trask.

He examines to see that lint or dirt didn't cover sprinkler heads, that boxes or shelves did not obstruct more than 18 inches below sprinklers and that the sprinkler system had adequate water pressure.

Fire extinguishers can put out a small fire if people know how and when to use them. Trask and two other firefighters demonstrated fire extinguishers outdoors for the nurses and nurses aides. Under careful supervision the nursing home employees extinguished a wastebasket fire.

Earlier, Trask said that a water (hose) extinguisher will put out most fires and a carbon dioxide (funnel) extinguisher will work on electrical fires.

During his inspection, Trask also investigated other possible fire hazards such as storage on exit stairways and overloading of electrical circuits.

He checked to see that exit doors worked properly, fire escapes were sturdy, fire extinguishers were full and the elevator was maintained well.

Trask told Benney Androite, nursing home maintenance director, fire prevention standards are up-to-date.

School inspections, nursing homes and inns are four times a year. It will take time to complete all the quarterly inspections and yearly inspections, for other town buildings.

"My colleague Paul Peasely, Fire Prevention Officer in Hingham, said that it took him three years to inspect every building once," said Trask.

Capt. Mark Trask

Trask said, "An organized fire prevention program has really been in progress for a year." He has been fire prevention officer for a year.

Trask added that the firefighters demonstrations are invaluable. The firefighters gave a demonstration when Channel 5 came to the common. A young boy later thanked firefighters because he had to put out an electrical stove fire two days later.

Trask dedicates a lot of time to his profession. He still manages to play golf once a week. He also enjoys gardening with his wife, Janet, four year-old son, Jason, and two and a half year-old daughter, Andrea, at their Scituate home.

Town meeting articles

The School Committee will ask town meeting for money to hire a mason-custodian to finish repairs to the high school gym floor. The mason will repair all the schools and town buildings and perform as a custodian in poor weather. The School Facilities Committee is supportive of the concept. Town meeting will be asked to appropriate or transfer from available funds $20,000. Board member Martha Gjesteby, although supportive of the concept, feels the $20,000 can be found in the school budget through excess amounts in the utility accounts.

The committee is also requesting the reallocation of $10,762 in insurance money to finish paying for the repair work on the damaged high school gym floor. School Supt. Eugene Crowell said the insurance settlement will go to the town's general fund and the committee must request town meeting action for the funds.

School Appointments

Jean Free, was appointed a Grade 2 teacher at the Osgood School and Ruth Dalbeck was appointed instrumental music teacher at the Deer Hill School. Coaching appointments included Gino DiGirolamo, girls field hockey coach and James Sullivan, assistant girls softball coach and Robert Morrissey, seventh and eighth grade soccer coach.

Regarding the classroom appointments, board member Jack Langmaid is concerned that too many teachers are coming to Cohasset Public Schools with the same professional background. School Supt. Eugene Crowell said Free was offered a Grade 6 position in Norwell and was a permanent substitute there for two years. She graduated from Eastern Nazarene College. Crowell said some of the 35 applicants were considered from such schools as Villanova, Boston College and Ohio State.

Custodian contract

The School Committee recently amended the custodian's contract by virtue of a 3-1 vote. Committee member Martha Gjesteby opposed the amendment.

Under the rectified agreement, custodians will receive a six percent increase in pay which began July 1. The pay raise will run until July 1, 1985.

Gjesteby voted in opposition to the memorandum. She said at the meeting. "I wanted to keep the package within six percent."

and construction signs .

An article is proposed to amend personnel bylaws to establish three classsifications and hourly rates for library pages.

Another article asks for a transfer for water saving devices for all residences connected to the town's sewer system.

Selectman Frank England said, "When we go to the special town meeting there will be many calls for money. I think that this proposal would get a dim reception at the meeting."

Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis said the commision would opt to submit a article with an undetermined amount of money to finance the plan.

The firefighters association paid $500 for 20 radios which call firemen must use because firehorns are shut off after 7 p.m. Reimbursement for the radios will be an article at town meeting.

Another article calls for $1,000 for a catch basin at lower Ledgewood Drive and the Water Dept. will sponsor an article calling for the transfer of $3,700 for supplies.

Attendance policy adopted by school committee

The School Committee finished its revisions and a new but stricter attendance policy is effective for the 1983-84 school year.

The policy was approved by the committee last week by virtue of a 4-1 vote with board member Joe Nedrow casting the dissenting vote.

Nedrow said the vote is too limiting and rigid and does not take into effect individual circumstances. But he added he accepts the idea of the attendance policy.

Under the new policy the number of parental discretion days are limited and credit will not be given if a student is absent too often during a term.

For all full day absences, excused or unexcused, no student absent for any reason may participate in after school activities or use any school facilities until the student returns to school for a complete day.

Students who have been dismissed for part of the school day will not be allowed to participate in extra-curricular activities unless they receive permission from the high school prinicipal.

The policy limits the number of parental discretion absences to five per term or 10 per school year and requires that parents submit a written request to the principal five days in advance.

The penalties for class cuts and other unexcused absences will be stricter. Students who miss more than 20 percent of class meetings per term will not receive credit for that term.

School committee members were concerned about seniors being penalized for visiting colleges during the school day but it was suggested that students going on the trips fill out a report form to verify the trip and help other students interested in the college.

DICK CONLEY REPORTS

Firefighter and Acting Capt. Dick Conley reported his doctor said he could not go back to work for six weeks.

He would have gone on vacation Sept. 23 so he is actually taking four more weeks of sick leave.

Conley said, "I hope that we can put this issue to rest now. I've met all conditions publicly and I reported as soon as I could."

LABOR COUNSEL SCREENING PROCESS

The Labor Counsel Screening process has been narrowed to four candidates.

At a special meeting Sept. 12 at 7:30 p.m., each candidate will be interviewed for one-half hour. Candidates will be judged on proximity of location and rating of the screening process.

TAD LANE REPAIRS

A Tad Lane resident complained to selectmen because she did not want "work of any kind" done on Tad Lane.

She said the town inadequately patched the road in front of her house.

She and other residents believe that this is a private way so the town should not provide maintenance.

Selectman John DeBassio said, "The town normally provides services to a private way. Owners often see private ways as entirely private. They are not. The town is obligated to service them."

Selectmen will continue to study the issue.

STRAITS POND

The town will prosecute anyone who opens and closes the gates at Straits Pond.

Selectmen decided to post signs to warn the public.

LIQUOR LICENSE

The Yacht Club was granted a liquor license for Sept. 2, although there was no Yacht Club representative to apply at the August 24 selectmen's meeting.

Audience members objected that someone should represent an organization in order to receive a license.

Selectmen granted the license. They will check the policy on representation for a liquor license.

TOWN COUNSEL ACCOUNTABILITY

Town Counsel member Richard Henderson said that town counsel will make monthly reports of routine business, status or litigations, to the selectmen.

CLARIFICATION

☐Last week the Mariner reported Marie Johnston of 120 Fairoaks Lane enrolled in the interior design program at Chamberlayne Junior College. The article added the department offers a three-year professional program which includes an associate's degree. Program graduates qualify as beginning professional designers and consultants. This information was released by college officials.

Marie graduated from design school in 1960 and has been working in this field for many years. She will be taking one architectural course towards her A.S.I.D. accreditation this fall at Chamberlayne.

☐Spoke to Gordon Ricketts' Mom recently, and she reports that Gordon is now aboard the aircraft carrier USS Independence. That is all that she is allowed to know, doesn't know the destination of the carrier or when it will return. Mrs. Ricketts promises to keep us informed.

☐It's good to see Kathy Corbett's smiling face in town again! Kathy has been away for eight weeks in Oaxaca, Mexico, as part of the A.F.S. program. She spent the time with a family with four children, and had a wonderful time with them. Highlights of her Mexican stay included trips to Alcapulco and ruins in the Southern Mexico area. Kathy surely will have stories to tell her friends upon her return to school next week, where she is a member of the senior class.

☐Congratulations to Brian and Terry (Prescott) Keating on the long-awaited birth of their daughter!

☐Marge Libby is recovering after her family visited her...all 28 of them! Just imagine the fun they must have had, and the reminiscing that must have gone on! Fabulous!

☐Bobby Barrows, Jr., almost put Cohasset on the map last weekend when he missed the Megabucks number by one.

☐It is always a beautiful sight when all 50 flags fly at the Vietnam Veteran Memorial Park as they did this weekend in honor of the installation of new officers at the George H. Mealy Post. A lot of work is involved in putting the flags up, and it looked spectacular! A special treat for those guests staying at Cohasset By The Sea.

☐Everyone was cheering for Tony Montero last weekend after he qualified with a 69 and made the championship flight of the Tobin Golf Tournament. That's real golf!

☐Welcome home to Diana O'Loughlin who had a great time in Rome, Florence and Venice! Although the weather was hot, she still managed to do all of the sightseeing that she had on her itinerary — She claims she'll have to learn English all over again! Bet she'll remember numbers though, in time for Monday night Bingo.

☐There is a new organization in town to support the soccer program, the soccer boosters. As their kick-off fundraiser, the boosters are planning to hold a pancake breakfast Sept. 15. They are seeking volunteers to help with the cooking and serving. If interested, please call Jean Reidy at 383-1014.

☐Jennifer Leptich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Leptich of Haystack Lane will enter Fairleigh Dickinson University in Madison, New Jersey, this fall. Jennifer is transferring from Bridgewater State College, where she was a student for two years. She will be majoring in Physical Therapy.

☐David and Kathy (Adams) Marks are celebrating! Aug. 18 their first-born, Lisa Marie, made her grand entrance into our world, and everyone is delighted! Included on that list are Lisa's grandparents, David and Fran Marks of Cohasset, and Arthur and Helen Adams of Quincy.

☐Connie Parker has promised a complete report on the new fence which will be erected at the Lothrop House. It seems she has received a lot of calls wondering what is going on, and the story is a "historical one."

☐An update on the Rotary phone book...as of last week the returns had already amounted to more than $1,000.

☐Received a call from Ken and Pat Leisher who are planning a move back to the area after living in California for many years. Another case where once New England gets in the system, the only thing to do is move "back home."

☐Speaking of moving, Tom and Susie (McCarthy) Reardon are moving to Cohasset this month. They are both Cohasset natives and are excited to move into their new home. They have purchased the Reardon home (no relation) on Red Gate Lane.

☐Won't mention the age, though it's a milestone, but want to be sure to wish Judy Kulturides a Happy Birthday and wish her many more.

☐There was a horse show at Wheelwright Park recently. They are a pleasure to watch. The Riding Club has done an outstanding job fixing the riding ring.

☐Congratulations to Mike O'Connell, who helped to raise over $9,000 in the Golf Tournament he held for Norm Leiveille. A lot of hard work that really paid off!

☐A special note to college students now they are beginning to leave for their various schools. Keep us up to date through the paper as happened last year. Got a great response from all students. It was a great way to keep in touch with what fellow students activities were going on. Write Sallyann Chatterton at 9 Red Gate Lane, and watch for your report to appear.

☐Good luck to Paul Buckley who begins his second year on the U. Maine football team. He left for the rigorous training Monday.

Unitl next week, please keep me informed with your news.

Over 25 Years of Service to the South Shore

Johanna Horn, 7, looks over the clothes at the "Red Balloon."

A summer review of Village business

By Theresa Sullivan

It has been a sunny, hot summer—not usually the type of weather which brings people shopping.

But somewhere between the boat, the beach and the basking, both visitors and residents of Cohasset found the time to make this summer a financial success for local merchants.

The economy seems to be picking up at little. At least that's what some Cohasset Village merchants have seen reflected in their businesses.

This summer has been better than other summers, said Hope Seeley, half-owner of In Stitches. "Needlepoint is a luxury item. This has been a wonderful summer. The economy is definitely improving," she said. In Stitches has been located in Cohasset Village for eight years.

Sine Pounder, proprietor of The Bread Shop, said people didn't seem to want to shop in the heat of July. But the month of August has picked up, she said.

Pounder opened a year ago at the suggestion of friends who loved her melt-in-your-mouth bread. She said the economy "sort of doesn't affect me much because people are (always) looking for value for their money. If we continue to deliver a quality product at a good price..."

Like many of the other merchants in the Village, Pounder's warm and helpful service could play a "small" part in bringing customers to her shop.

"July was better than expected," Wilson Stonier, owner of The Red Balloon, said. He said his business has picked up steadily in the last six months. He and his wife Jane opened the toy store last August.

Stonier said they keep the store open on Sundays to accommodate customers. In terms of sales, Sundays are "nowhere up to the other days' volume," he said.

Frank Smith, proprietor of Edward M. Fleming Hardware, said some Sundays are busy and some are slow. "I don't know if I'll continue to stay open in the winter," he said.

The manager of another store, who wished to remain anonymous, said he'll probably close on Sundays after Christmas. He said he was "skeptical" about being open on Sundays, but "if you keep closed, you lose business."

None of the store owners who were open on Sunday indicated it was financially successful to be open.

The owner of Village Sport is the sole employee of the athletic equipment shop. Jack Tirrell closes his store on Sundays to give himself a day off.

He said some 60 percent of his business comes from the Christmas season. Therefore, he said, business has picked up this summer but, in his case, he said it's more a reflection of the economy than of the weather.

Smith found June's rain kept people from using their boats. The sale of boating supplies was low during June as a result, he said.

August had beautiful boating weather. It has also been pretty comfortable for shopping.

A thorough policy

In May the School Committee accepted a new attendance policy assignment and the final paper was submitted for review last week.

We grade the policy an "A-" and if administrators execute the policy in good faith, the final grade will be an A.

The attendance problems were major and in this instance ludicrous. John Replogle, student representative to the committee, reported in early June he knew of one student who missed 85 days and was not disciplined. The student took days off because "he felt like it." Still the student was able to pass his courses because he had two days to make up his work.

This new policy goes a long way to eliminating that situation from happening again.

True, the policy is tough and strict. But it should be. In addition, no rule should preempt common sense.

Committee member Joe Nedrow cast the lone dissenting vote against the policy because he felt the policy was too rigid and did not take into account individual circumstances.

That, we feel, will be the key to the success of this new policy. Will exceptional cases be considered before penalties are executed.

How about the alarm clock which didn't go off because of a power outage or a frigid morning in February when the car engine failed to turn over?

We have published a full text of the policy because all parents and students should have a complete understanding of the policy before school begins.

Chartis Langmaid, who usually attends every school board meeting, made a very important statement when the committee began deliberations in early June.

She said parents must take the lead and become more responsible for student tardiness and absences.

Board members Jack Langmaid and Martha Gjesteby also made valid points in these two statements.

Parents must know the key to a good education is students must be sitting in chairs in class and good attendance should be stressed because "we want children to be taught."

Finally, one last word about the organization of the policy. Jack Langmaid and board member Diana Kornet should be commended for their diligence during the summer as they worked on the policy. Public input was encouraged as was input from students, teachers and parents.

There should be no complaints about the thoroughness of the policy. It is complete and precise.

Bus drivers are 'monumental'

By Claire McDonough

I'm taking up a collection.

I want to build a monument to the woman who daily lays her sanity on the line.

The woman who, when she kisses her loved ones goodbye in the morning doesn't know what her condition will be when she sees them again.

The woman who doesn't know the meaning of the word "fear."

Oh, she used to know what it meant, but her vocabulary has been reduced to prayers for blizzards.

I want to build a monument to the woman who can cope with kindergarten tears and junior high cuss words, and who can deal with high school romances and elementary school examination day jitters.

Also to the woman who knows what to do when there's a snake under her seat or a tailgater on her bumper.

You all know who I mean. You can pick her out at a party or at Angelo's' snack bar. She's the woman who carries a mirror with her at all times so she can see what's going on behind her.

She's the woman who walks into a social gathering and automatically greets 27 adults with:

"Don't anybody move. You are to stay in your seats, all of you. And put out those cigarettes. I don't care if you do have a note from your mother."

That's right. I want you all to join me in a salute to the school bus driver.

I must confess I didn't always appreciate the school bus driver. Oh, I liked her, all right. I smiled and waved whenever she picked up our kids. When I met her socially, I chatted with her about assorted trivia. But I never really appreciated her.

Not until 1972 when one of my kids got kicked off the bus for fighting. There were five other mothers whose sons were involved in the same fracas, and we shared the dilemma.

No more shoving our little darlings out the door in the morning for the nice lady to take them away. It was up to us to see to it that they got to school.

We conferred, and at first we agreed that it would be better for their character development if we made them walk to school for the four weeks that they were banned from the bus.

After all, we pointed out virtuously, if this was to be a learning exprience for the miscreants, it would be well for them to experience the maximum inconvenience.

We added silently, for us to be inconvenienced as little as possible.

We remained firm for two days. During that time homework assignments were lost or dropped in mud puddles. Dogs followed their young masters to school and had to be retrieved by mothers in nightgowns, bathrobes and hair rollers.

Worst of all, the same fight that had precipitated the banishment tended to break out again half way between home and the junior high.

Five mothers conferred again, and reluctantly agreed that we would have to take turns driving the boys to school.

"After all," we consoled each other, "how hard can it be? Actually, it's hard to believe that a grown woman can't control a bus full of children. Right?"

It was the longest month we ever spent in our lives. We learned to drive with one eye on the road and the other on the rear view mirror.

When the boys fought and yelled, we grit our teeth and made ourselves mutter "Child abuse is a felony" ten times before we spoke.

When they were quiet we knew they were plotting some deviltry and we kept glancing over our shoulders.

One boy — mine - responded to a dare and mixed the contents of all five thermos bottles and drank the ensuing concoction. By the time he had finished being sick and I had finished cleaning up we were 45 minutes late for school.

At the end of the month one mother was a candidate for A.A., one had to be taken on a Carribean cruise, one had locked herself in her room and was making obscene phone calls to Dr. Seuss, and the remaining two weren't speaking to each other or anyone else.

Last week I met one of Scituate's school bus drivers. Her hands didn't shake, her eyes were clear, and she assured me that she just loves driving my granddaughter.

So I'm taking up this collection. I want to build a shrine with a plaque that reads, "Hail to thee, school bus driver. You make Mother Theresa look like King Herod."

A look at the Cohasset summer vacation

By Sallyann Chatterton

Webster's Dictionary defines "vacation" as' Freedom from any activity; rest; respite; intermission. A period of rest and freedom from work, study, etc., and a time of recreation, usually a specific interval in a year.

For all age groups, summertime is vacation time in Cohasset. Not many residents leave for the entire summer, although most plan some form of vacation.

Unlike other towns on the South Shore, there aren't a lot of "summer people" to make the population swell.

Children in Cohasset find numerous activities to keep themselves amused, as well as many types of lessons that they can take.

Usually there s a "plan" in the morning (i.e., tennis, sailing, swimming, etc.), followed by a picnic lunch and afternoons at the beach.

The Cohasset Recreation Dept. has a program for the children that they all love (Moms love it as well), and the Swim Center has swim team, diving team and many various lessons.

For children up to 14 years-old, Cohasset is a paradise they don't need (or want) to leave, although most attend some form of a sport-oriented camp for a week or two.

Cohasset youths seem to have a more limited summer program. Vacation to a large number means a summer job, a good way to save for the long winter months or for the college costs. Those that hold jobs find their recreation at night, usually starting with a stop at Sandy Beach for a list of parties, activities, or a "rave" with some friends. There are no real plans that the town makes for its youths to help plan their nights, but they seem to be able to find enough to do.

Movies are a big form of amusement, with a trip to McDonald's or KoKo Island to wind up the night.

"SINGLES"

From teens to "singles." Singles don't spend much time in our town, as there isn't much night life for them. Vacations to them consist of at least a two-week stay somewhere, with a lot heading for Nantucket or Martha's Vineyard. Nights are usually spent "in town," as Boston has a great deal to offer. The night life is unlimited, and the "scenery" changes with the location that they pick.

ADULT

For the parent, the days are full of driving the kids to their various activities that have been carefully planned. The day seems to revolve around the child, making sure their vacation is a full one.

There is always one ear open for the weather report, so that dinner can be planned around the cookout that takes place at least twice a week, and there are always "outings" planned for family fun. Most mothers in Cohasset are anxious for Labor Day to come by this time of year, so that they can get their life back in gear, start "their vacation."

Vacation for the sailor or yachtsman in Cohasset is a paradise. The Sailing Club helps to teach the children to enjoy and take an active part in a weekend sail, so the whole family may take off for as long as they wish and have a grand time doing so.

Even if it is just going on board after dinner to sit in the picturesque harbor, it's a vacation for the boat-lover.

A lot of families find golfing to be their form of vacation, again something that can be done right in the area. Golf is a great escape for a lot of men, where they can just forget everything but "the game."

Education is a national asset

(Here is a reprinted story from the New York Times Education Summer Survey entitled "Dear Students: Come Back, Come Back, Wherever You Are." This article was given to School Committee members at a recent meeting by board member Martha Gjestegy. Ed Note.)

By Saul Schachter

As part of my regular teaching routine at the Long Island school where I work, I called six parents one day during the spring to discuss their children's poor attitude toward school. Unfortunately, the families were in Florida. During the winter, I had tried contacting a mother about her son's similar problem. She had taken him Christmas shopping.

Don't get me wrong. I love my job. I've been blessed in my four years of teaching with wonderful, cheerful students who brighten my day by their mere presence in my class. But I'd love to see them more often.

My students visit the dentist, the doctor, they go shopping, hunting, to the airport, to the Motor Vehicle Bureau. Above all, my students and their families love to go to Florida. Even though we have school vacations in December, February, April, July and August, the entire school building seems to clear out in March.

Two years ago, a worried parent called me. "Mr. Schachter," she said, "we were thinking of going to Florida in two weeks — you know the fares are real cheap then — and we were wondering if you thought it was a good idae if we took Melissa (not her real name.)"

I told the mother that Melissa was a weak student who needed constant help and encouragement and that when she missed even a day, it took a long time for her to catch up. Melissa's mother grudgingly agreed and hung up.

Two weeks later, Melissa was absent. I spotted her older brother, a senior, and asked how Melissa was. "Oh, Melissa's O.K.," he said. "She's in Florida."

"But, why aren't you there?" I asked.

"I can't afford to miss school," he said simply.

Melissa was gone three weeks, returned with a wonderful tan, but was so far behind she failed the course and will be repeating it starting in September.

I have Ernie again this year, too. Ernie's parents own a yacht and last fall they were away 32 days with their son. Ernie, subsequently, failed the course, which led him to say in an exasperated tone to me, "I've got to tell my parents that I have to be in school."

My students visit a lot of dentists and doctors. Frequently the parents arrive around 9:30 a.m. to pick up their children and return just before basketball or field hockey practice begins at 3 p.m. On the heels of doctor visits are trips to the Motor Vehicle Bureau. A colleague recently suggested that we toss out all of our textbooks and replace them with the Motor Vehicle Bureau driver's manual. That proposal was narrowly voted down.

This colleague encountered a wave of angry parents not too long ago with a class project he had assigned. He urged his students to do some research at a college library two miles away. It had excellent facilities and provided a superb academic environment.

Some parents were up in arms. "You mean I have to drive him all the way over there?" Another groused, "It would be a lot simpler if they used the school's library." You would have thought they were being sent to the local bar.

Other similar attitudes have risen lately. Frequently, I come across a parent and child that I know. I'll greet them warmly and inquire how the child is doing. Before the child can open his mouth, his mother will point out, "Gary has Mr. Stone for science. He could've had Mr. Williams. So, I guess this is the lesser of the two evils."

I'm happy that these afflications haven't begun to infect my Asian-born students or their parents. Many of them have arrived in the Glen Head, L.I., area within the last three or four years knowing little or no English.

They are invariably polite, industrious, and almost never absent. (Would I be helpful if I told them about the cheaper flights offered in March to Florida?) They come clutching Chinese/American dictionaries, take copious notes, and by the end of the year, they're usually near the top of my class. And, their cheerfulness and dedication have made them popular with their peers.

I have one girl from Taiwan who receives a hearty round of applause whenever she correctly reads a passage in English. These students remind me of immigrants from an earlier era who scrimped and saved so that their children could gain an education and get ahead in this country.

Those values seem to be disappearing. Today, parents spend more to amuse their child than it once did to educate their parents.

Marion B. Folsom, former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, once said, "Education is both a personal interest and a national asset. For education en larges life — not only for each of us as a person, but for all of us as a nation." We can ill afford to ignore his wisdom.

Murray's Memos

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

Budget Addresses Feminization of Poverty

The Fiscal Year 1984 shows sensitivity and concern for the thousands of women struggling in poverty in Massachusetts. The cooperation of both branches fighting against the feminization of poverty has been impressive.

The new state budget contains most of the recommendations of the women's legislative caucus. As in the past, we continued to address economic areas of concern to women.

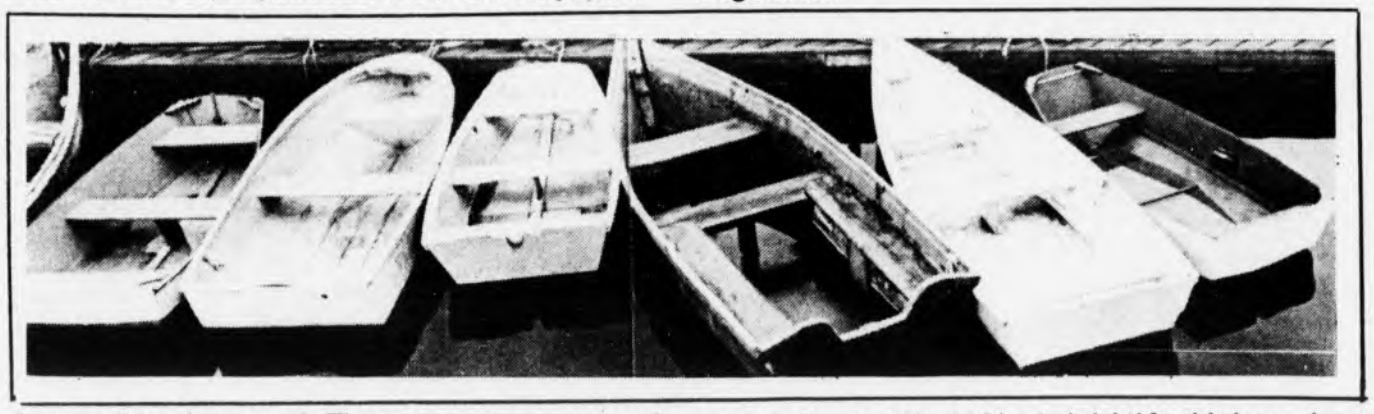
Areas such as day care, job training, job placement and employment opportunities constituted a major thrust in the caucus FY '84 budget agenda, also of great import to members during budget deliberations were services for battered women, rape victims and the DES-exposed.

New to this year's budget is the caucus recommendation for a special study commission on comparable worth. The new commission signifies the first of many important steps toward the elimination of wage discrimination against women in Massachusetts.

The purpose of the commission is to investigate job segregation and pay scales which account for the fact that women earn 59 cents for every one dollar earned by men.

Job training and placement within the Department of Public Welfare Employment Training Program and Work Incentive Program represents an $18 million expense in the new budget. The appropriation has a direct impact on AFDC recipients, over 90 percent of whom are women heading single parent families. Such an expenditure benefits both recipients and the state, since it results in job placements and new taxpayers.

Crucial to the caucus agenda of economic independence for women is day care. The 1984 child care appropriation amounts to almost $51 million. Day care is an essential work-related expense. Mothers cannot work if they are unable to secure quality day care for their children.



Another caucus item new to this year's budget is $100,000 for rape prevention and victim services managed by the Department of Public Health. The recent media attention to a number of rapes within the past few months has created a strain on the largely volunteer-staffed rape crisis centers across the Commonwealth. The services provided to victims by rape crisis centers are essential if victims are to put the attack behind them and get on with their lives.

Also paramount to women's safety is the $2.5 million appropriation for battered women's services. Twenty-five thousand, 180 victims of family violence — adults and children — have utilized services for battered women during the past year. During the same period, another 2,821 people were turned away in crisis due to insufficient funds. The new appropriation is an attempt to meet the ever-increasing demand for these services.

We commend the valiant stand the legislature has taken, in difficult economic times, to support the women of this commonwealth with a budget sensitive to women's needs.

Further caucus items included in the conference committee report are $550,000 for the displaced homemaker program; $90,000 for the state campaign on diethylstilbestrol; $171, 546 for the state Office of Minority Business Assistance; and Language Safeguarding, a day-care facility for the children of state employees.

Composed of 20 women in the House, four women in the Senate and 19 male colleagues, the Massachusetts Caucus of Women Legislators has worked to improve the status of women in Massachusetts since 1975. I was past chairman of the Massachusetts Caucus of Women Legislators.

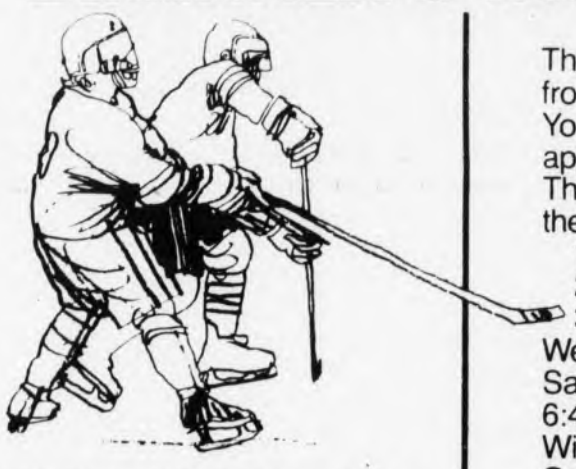
Here are some tips when dealing with foreign currencies abroad: Change your money at regional or large national banks to get the best exchange rate in stable currencies. Avoid hotels for this purpose. In countries with weak currencies or currency export controls, shop for perfectly legal "street rates" that often can better the official bank rates. Follow the daily exchange rates in the newspaper. Keep a majority of your traveling assets in traveler's checks rather than cash. They usually command a better rate than U.S. bank notes. Take some local currency with you to avoid the hassle and uncertainty of exchanging money at the airport upon your arrival.



When planning a vacation to a foreign country, there are many important facts that you should know pertaining directly to your point of destination. At COLPITTS TRAVEL CENTER, we will make all accommodations. We will also keep you advised on any and all information that is pertinent to your destination. We are conveniently located at 3 Brook Street, Scituate. We look forward to being of assistance to you soon. We are open 9-5 Mon-Fri; 10-4 Sat and by appointment. Have a safe Labor Day. Commercial use studied

Cox Estate transfer examined

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Appeals Board Chairman Robert Booth said the board might try to set conditions on any approval of the use of the Cox estate for an office building in an attempt to keep the estate from further changes in character.

Yankee Oil and Gas, Inc., of Boston, applied for variances from the zoning bylaws for use and parking, in an attempt to change the harborfront estate of multi-million dollar heiress Jessie Cox into corporate headquarters.

Although the estate, The Oaks, is listed on the assessors records as having six and one-third acres, the application seeks to rezone "more than thirteen acres." Attorney Christopher Sullivan said the difference is the depth to mean low tide along the 1,600 foot shoreline.

Sullivan denied after the hearing his clients have any intention of developing a marina on the site. He acknowledged his application differs from the assessors records.

Development of a marina would require three permits, including those from the Conservation Commission and Army Corps of Engineers.

Paul Montel, a partner in Yankee Oil and Gas, signed an "unconditional" agreement June 10. Sullivan refused to reveal the terms at the insistence of the Cox heirs, but added he would sell the property if the variances are denied.

Sullivan said the sale to Yankee may not be completed if defects are found in the title under terms of the agreement.

Sullivan says the 50 year-old main house contains 50 rooms, some as small as closets, 19,000 sq. ft. and has seven outbuildings.

Assessors records list the estate at six acres and 13,350 sq. ft. valued at $71,000; a house at $231,000, garage at $51,500, pool at $45,000, barn-shed $3,975, and "Misc." at $8,475, for a total valuation of $365,000 and total tax for 1983 at $20,257.

Sullivan said the company plans to utilize the tennis courts and swimming pool, but following the hearing, said the garden clubs in town have been offered the use of the greenhouse.

Yankee plans to keep the outside property the same, use half the basement for a computer room, keep most of the features of the first floor the same except the kitchen, and remodel the second floor.

Currently, they do not plan to use the third floor, although they later said it does provide room for expansion.

They have 15 management employees in Boston, but officials said they would make provision for 20 employes, and asked to use 29 parking spaces.

Sullivan said the structure is so large and maintenance costs so excessive it is not feasible to operate the complex as a single family home.

Yankee asked a waiver for the requirement of filing a plan of the property, because they are seeking a change of use and not of structure, and the waiver "will allow for a speedy consideration of the application."

Sullivan said although the sale has not been finalized, the courts would consider them as the owners of the property, and therefore rightful applicants under the bylaws.

Planning Board Chairman, John O'Toole, said he wanted to speak "as an individual," and his board would send their recommendation to the appeals board later. O'Toole, who has travelled extensively, suggested the property might be better used if owned by the town. He cited coastal areas in Europe, where choice seaside locations are kept for the use of the public.

Diane Sullivan questioned the effect the change of use might have on the assessed value of "others"...Sullivan said after the motel was built Cox went to court and got her assessment reduced by about $100,000 because of the effect of the motel on her neighborhood.

After the hearing, Diane Sullivan said she was concerned if the change to commercial or office use is allowed, residents of Margin Street, Howard Gleason Road, etc., may also be able to go to court as Cox did and get their assessments reduced, claiming detriment to their neighborhood.

In their application, Yankee says: "The two structures adjacent to the property are a motel and a yacht club. These create far more intensive uses than the variance sought."

Booth warned any changes in zoning would "run with the land" and have a writing conditions permit to try to keep the estate from changing under subsequent owners.

Selectmen accept four of eight firefighter grievances

By Cindi Bondi

The firefighters' grievance against Chief Martin Dooley, exempting a firefighter from giving 72 hour notice if he changes shifts, was one of four accepted grievances by selectmen at an Aug. 24 meeting.

Selectmen also accepted the union's firefighter's grievance concerning the illness certificate, captain's pay and issues concerning allowances of clothing, EMTIC and master mechanic pay.

72-Hour Notice

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said "72 hours is a long time to notify a shift change because an emergency can happen in no time. I would think that a man would be man enough to show up unless something very important must change his schedule."

Selectman John DeBassio added "If the chief goes to the trouble of setting up a special program then he should notify the firefighters when the program will take place. No one should miss a shift unless there is an emergency."

Certification of Illness

Selectmen also accepted the grievance to Dooley's order requiring a certificate of illness whenever the chief requested one.

Selectman Clifford Mitman said "It is reasonable to expect notification if an employee is out for a long time period but not every time someone is out sick."

Mutual Aid Agreement with Hull

Eighteen firefighters submitted a grievance to selectmen because they do not believe that they should respond to every Hull fire.

Firefighters Union president William Protrulis said "We don't feel that we should have to go to every fire."

Usually Cohasset would respond to the sixth box of the Green Hill Station.

Hull covers the northwest end boxes of Cohasset.

DeBassio said, "This plan was not originally instituted, it was only discussed. We are obliged to disregard it because he (the chief) has rescinded the idea. It may be on the books but it is not in effect."

If Dooley implements the mutual aid agreement then firefighters will be able to submit a grievance.

Selectmen decided this grievance shall not be discussed by the board.

Drilling During Evening Hours

Firefighters said Dooley unfairly scheduled training drills during nighttime hours, but Selectmen did not agree, and denied the grievance.

Firefighters earlier expressed training had always been scheduled during the day. They said that day and evening drills reduced the number of call firefighters from five to one.

Selectman Frank England said, "Training and scheduling should be up to the chief.

Overtime

Firefighters questioned the chief's decision to put Fire Prevention Officer Mark Trask on overtime.

Selectmen asked Protrulis if Trask was the only firefighter to receive overtime. Protrulis said "He's ahead of most in overtime."

England said, "If the chief needs extra time he has the right to designate it where he sees it is needed."

Captains Pay

Selectmen accepted the captains pay grievance with no further discussion as to whether firefighter James Runey should receive captains pay for Jan. 1, 2, and 3.

Runey worked at the position of captain on those days and should receive holiday pay for Jan. 1.

Bell Caps

Selectmen rejected the grievance that Fire Chief Martin Dooley should not have purchased bell caps for the fire department instead of protective program.

Laugelle said "There is no grievance in regard to bell caps." Mitman added "Protective clothing should be a separate issue."

Laugelle concluded "We ask the chief to buy protective equipment before dress clothes in the future."

Clothing, and Master Mechanic Pay

Selectman England said clothing, EMTIC and Master Mechanic allowances should be separate issues, although selectmen approved all three allowances.

Selectmen determined a firefighter will receive the full allotment for firefighter's clothing whether he works for three days or a year.

The EMTIC (Emergency Medical Technician Instruction Coordinator) position should be paid for a full year because he received a promotion at the beginning of the year.

Master mechanics should also be paid for performing their jobs.

Work allowed on ice cream, deli shop

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Sewer Commissioners unanimously agreed to allow work to proceed on John Whitton's new ice cream, deli and bakery on Stagecoach Way, even though Panos "Peter" Kulturides threatened to sue the commission Monday night.

Whitten said he has decided to call the establishment "Ebeneezer's," like his North Scituate shop, rather than Meats and Sweets.

Commissioners Joseph Gwinn, Edward Guild and Chairman Charles DeSantis approved the application over the objections of former commissioner Maxwell Pounder whose wife, Sine, owns the Bread Shop. The commissioners voted to allow Ebeneezer's 200 gallons per day, and DeSantis said the difference was "insignificant."

Kulturides said a previous sewer board refused to let him expand into a catering business at the site of Pat's Barber Shop in 1978. He said, "I am going to sue you!"

Kulturides said new businesses are favored over old businesses like Margie's Seafoods, which needs help. Commissioners later agreed to review Kulturides 1978 denial.

Kulturides was joined by Carmen Carlucci, owner of the Strawberry Parfait, in objecting to a permit being issued to Meats and Sweets at an Aug. 23 meeting.

Pounder said the commissioners should have used the 1979 flows of 11,331 for three establishments on the one water meter, because they were more definite. Pounder said those flows were being exceeded by the current occupants without the addition of Ebeneezers into the complex.

Summer reading party

"Byte into a Good Book," the summer reading program at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, will conclude with a gala party to honor Cohasset youths who participated Thursday, September 1 from 4 to 5 p.m. at the Parish House.

The reading program has attracted over 100 students who read a minimum of 10 books and many who read more than 20 books.

As part of the party fun Lisbeth Koopman-Wyman, a former art teacher in the Cohasset schools, will assist youths with personalized apple-print making. In addition to games and prizes, these readers will decorate their own candied apple.

Jill Crafts, board member of the Friends of the Library, is chairman of this event.

School's new attendance policy

Here is the new attendance and tardiness policy for the Cohasset Jr-Sr. High School. The policy was adopted and voted by the School Committee Aug. 23.

It will supersede and take precedent over any other written material governing school regulations concerning attendance and tardiness.

General Statement

Massachusetts General Law Chapter 76 requires 180 days of school attendance for persons between the ages of six and 16 years old.

The Cohasset School Committee affirms its commitment to encourage regular school attendance, not only in obedience of the law but also in recognition that the educational process requires such regular attendance.

Unavoidable absences due to illness and injury do occur from time to time.

In addition, parental decisions about their children's activities may also result in occasional absences.

The following definitions, procedures and penalties are adopted to promote a seriousness of purpose concerning attendance, incentive to acquire a responsible attitude toward school attendance, a timely response to serious or chronic absences and appropriate communications between school and home.

Included are sections dealing with general attendance, tardiness, class cutting, early dismissal and in-school illnesses.

Absence Policy - Full Day

A. Excused Absence, illness or incapacity

Procedure

A parent or guardian must telephone or otherwise notify the high school attendance clerk by 10 a.m. of the first day of the absence, stating the nature of the illness or other medical problem and the expected duration of the absence.

On the day the student returns to school, the parent or guardian must send a handwritten and signed note to the attendance clerk to state why the student's just ended absence from school was medically necessary.

The parent or guardian may be asked to verify personally to the high school principal the circumstances of the absence.

As an alternative, the student's physician may provide a written and signed note which will be delivered to the attendance clerk on the day the student resumes school attendance.This note should indicate the general medical condition which caused the student to be absent and the exact dates of the absence.

Limitations

Prolonged absence from school may lead to an "incomplete" or a "no credit" on the student's report card. All such decisions will be made following conferences involving the student's teachers, guidance counselor, parent or guardian and a member of the administration. Every reasonable effort will be made to assist students to make up work and provide instructional help, during and following any prolonged absence.

Procedure to make up missed work

Students have two days to make up work for each one day missed. Homework, quizzes, tests, papers and class work may all be made up. It is the responsibility of the student to arrange time during eighth period and other available periods to meet with teachers to get any needed help.

Teachers may extend the makeup time period when, despite, a sincere effort on the part of the student, insufficient time was available for needed help during the regular makeup time period.

Penalty

There are no penalites for excused absences.

All full day absences, excused or unexcused

No student absent for any reason may participate in after school activities or use any school facilities such as the gym, the library, the computer center, the math lab and the reading lab until his or her return to school for a complete day. The only exception is that students returning from a school trip, (Excused Absence No. 2) may resume normal activities upon return to school.

School-related functions and activities

Procedure: The teacher, coach, or principal must provide notice, in writing to the attendance clerk, that the student will miss all or part of the school day. This notice will be delivered no later than by the conclusion of the school day immediately preceding the first day of the absence.

It is assumed that most often the authorized staff member would submit a list of names of all students who will be away under his or her authority to the attendance clerk at least one day in advance.

Limitations

There are no limitations, although the principal may recommend that students who have had prolonged absences not incur additional absences which are discretionary. Such recommendations would be either in writing to the parent or guardian or at a parent conference.

Procedure to make up missed work

Two days are allowed to make up work for each day missed. Homework, quizzes, tests and class work may all be made up. It is the responsibility of the student to arrange with his or her teacher for time to get extra help. There are no penalties for excused absences.

Absences caused by parental decisions

Parents or guardians from time to time excuse their children from school attendance. Reasons include appointments with doctors, visits to schools or colleges for admissions interviews or family vacations or activities.

New attendance policy

Procedure

A request to the principal or assistant principal in writing must be made at least five days in advance of the absence. The principal will honor the request if the student is in good standing, subject to the limitations in the following paragraph.

Good standing is defined as follows: not under suspension; no grade below C- in the previous term, not in the process of making up two or more weeks of work missed due to previous absence.

Limitations

Under this policy no more than five absences per term or ten per school year are allowed. In addition, parents or guardians are subject to state law (Chap. 76, Sect.2) which states that any parent or guardian who causes his or her child not to attend school for seven days during any six-month period shall be fined upon complaint by a supervisor of attendance. Written notice will be sent to the student's home when four in a term, or nine in the year, have been taken.

Procedure to make up missed work

Two days are allowed to make up work for each day missed. Homework, papers, quizzes, tests, and class work may all be made up. It is the responsibility of the student to arrange with his or her teacher for time to get help. Students are encouraged to ask for work ahead of time so that they will be able to keep up with all work during the time missed.

There are no penalties for excused absences.

Unexcused absence

Absences not verified according to procedures outlined under Policy on Absence Excused Absence; absences at parental discretion in excess of five per term or ten per year; suspensions or all other. Procedure: record as absent - unexcused.

Limitations

When a student has missed 20 percent of any term because of unexcused absences, no credit will be given for that term. The report will show a letter grade for each course and a no credit.

A notice will be sent to the student's home, with a return portion for verification that the parent has received the notice, no later than when a student is within two absences of receiving "no credit."

A conference with the parent or guardian will be requested at that time.

Procedure to make up missed work

Written work may be passed in but will be marked late and marked down. Teachers are expected to state at the outset of their courses what individual policies will be followed for marking down late work.

There will be no make up for missed class work, including quizzes, tests, and class discussion. Students are responsible for getting class work missed from classmates. No credit will be given for work missed.

Tardiness

Definition: late to school and late to class.

Excused Tardiness

Due to bus delay, power failure, very occasional car trouble, teacher or other staff pass. New students (transfers, seventh graders) will be excused for class tardiness caused by unfamiliarity with the buildings, the schedule, the routine, etc. for their first few weeks.

Procedure

If late to school, check with attendance clerk upon arrival at school. Get approval for the tardiness from either the principal, the assistant principal, or the head of Guidance Department. Proceed directly to class and present pass for excused tardiness to the teacher.

Seventh graders and transfer students who are late to class because of confusion or lack of familiarity with the school system need not get passes but should get assistance immediately and proceed to class as soon as possible. There is no penalty.

Unexcused Tardiness

All other than above. Procedure:

Check in with attendance clerk on arrival, if tardy for the beginning of school. Report to detention room and remain there until the next bell for the next period.

If tardy for a class period, report to class as soon as possible.

New attendance policy

Penalty

All classes, study halls, and homerooms missed will be considered to have been cut. (See Class Cut Policy.) Tardiness in excess of five minutes will be counted as a cut, although the student may attend the remainder of the class, if the teacher permits. Students not in class will remain in the detention room until the next bell. All written work will be counted as one day late.

For all unexcused tardiness, the student may not use any school facilities after the school day and may not participate in after school activities that day.

Class Cuts

Definition: Unauthorized absence from any class or study hall or homeroom by a student recorded as present at school. Any unexcused tardiness in excess of five minutes will be considered a cut.

Penalty

There will be no credit for class work missed. All written work may be passed in but will be marked late and reduced in grade, according to the policy of the individual teacher.

No class work may be made up for credit, although students are responsible for all work covered. Students should find out about missed work from classmates. Teachers have no responsibility to students who have cut class.

No student who has cut one or more classes, or homeroom, or study hall may participate in any after school activity that day or use any school facilities after school that day.

Any student who has missed 20 percent of class meetings due to unexcused absences and or class cuts in any one term will receive no credit for that term . The report card will show a letter grade for the course and no credit .(N.C.)

A notice will be sent to the student's home, with a return portion for verification that the parent has received the notice, no later than when a student is within two absences or cuts of receiving no credit, and a conference with the parent or guardian will be requested at that time.

Early Dismissal

Parents or guardians are strongly urged to make appointments for their children after school hours. Parents or guardians who must request early dismissal for their child must make a written request to the attendance clerk on that morning.

Parent requests should specify the following: name, date, time to be excused, destination, reason for leaving, means of travel from school and a telephone number by which the above information may be confirmed (parent, doctor, dentist, etc.)

Students must check out with the attendance clerk prior to leaving the building. Students who have been dismissed for part of the school day will not be allowed to participate in extra or co-curricular activities that day unless they receive permission from the high school principal.

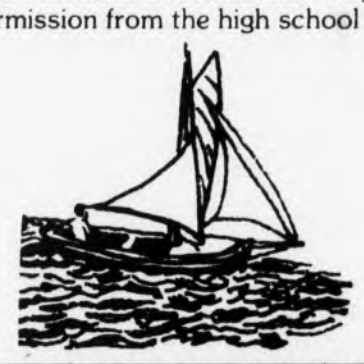
Because of the school's legal responsibility for the welfare of the students, requests for students or by students to leave school to run errands will not be granted.

Students making more than one request every four weeks will have to see the principal and a conference with the parent to explain the difficulties incurred by missing class or classes may be recommended.

Illness in school

If a student becomes ill while in school, the student must report to the nurse after obtaining permission from a staff member. Being ill is not an excuse for missing homeroom, class or study hall unless a pass has been issued by a nurse. If a student fails to present a pass, a class cut will be charged to the student.

Ill students may not leave school without the authorization of the nurse or an administrator.



Students must check out with the attendance clerk prior to leaving the building. Students who have been dismissed early will not be allowed to participate in extra or co-curricula activities that day unless they receive permission from the high school principal.

Mr. & Mrs. Christopher Abbruzzese

The Bowdoin College Chapel in Brunswick, Maine, was the setting for the July 30 wedding of Katherine E. Ault and Christopher J. Abbruzzese. A reception followed in the Bowdoin Alumni House.

The bride is the daughter of David and Maja Ault of Wayne, Maine. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Abbruzzese of Cohasset.

The maid of honor was Leslie A. Ault, sister of the bride and best man was James Porter. Ushers were Michael Abbruzzese, brother of the groom, Michael Assoni, Scott Gordon and John Durkin. Bridesmaids were Kristen Johnson, Paula Gesmundo, Sarah and Annie Abbruzzese.

Katherine's wedding gown was made of white satin, with small pearl beads on the neckline, sleeves and cathedral train. She carried three white orchids.

The bridesmaids wore long lavendar taffeta gowns with a single pearl necklace.

The groom wore a black tuxedo with tails and top hat. The ushers also wore black tuxedos with white pleated shirts and bowties.

The bride arrived at the church in a horse-drawn carriage which also carried the couple to the reception after the wedding.

The bride and groom are graduates of Bowdoin College. She is employed by the United States Trust Company of Boston and he by Target Industries of Cohasset. The couple will live in South Weymouth, after a trip to Bermuda.

'Haughty' couture connoisseurs wear labels out

By Lois Martin

It was one of those rare uptown excursions Intown. Newbury Street in Boston. That's where clothing has labels that aren't slashed. Nothing is irregular and one size doesn't fit all. There are no factory outlets there.

But since leftover summer sales are still on, I approached Bonwit Teller prepared for a challenge, to find something with only two numbers on the sale price ticket.

I was over confident. That store deals with town budget figures, cherry sheet totals, no toll booth numbers. For example there was this simple red suit on the mezzanine. It was in a corner sale section, a place where some stores hide the good buys. With any luck you should find 'as is' written on the ticket. That means the zipper's broken, the bodice is size 6 and the skirt is size 18½ or someone dragged it on the floor. That's not the case at Bonwits.

PATCHES

The suit was reduced for quick sale, marked down from $1,550 to $990. It wasn't my shade of red.

All the saleswomen in the classy shops have accents that bespeak of more countries than America. I wonder if they'd hire Rhode Island natives.

But I'd like to know who's buying that suit. What does she do for work?

Back out on The Street I merged with women in suits and sneakers, men with punk hair cuts, young career people in what used to be pantyhose for nurses. I believe if I were to wear my chewed sneakers to work with a suit, someone would ask me if my feet hurt.

And I know I'm supposed to say running shoes, not sneakers.

Newbury Street is not exactly a cross section of America. It never wanted to be. The New England Mutual Life Insurance Building spread itself out in front of the near puzzling John Hancock edifice, balanced by the architecturally reliable Pru.

A small store named "Divino" had a black ensemble in its window. It had a longish black taffeta skirt with a bow belt, velvet puffing off the shoulders, topped with big fat rhinestones, all adorning what looked like chainmail of wool and silver mesh.

Inside I asked the saleswoman with the classy accent where someone would wear that. "Anywhere," she said. Right, to the office, a PTA meeting, the fair or the clothesline.

But there was a blouse there I loved, black, khaki, touch of green and burgundy, perfect for a somber suit. All silk, it said, $380. I replaced it on the rack as if it were a dangerous explosive.

They encouraged me to join their mailing list. Of course I did. That's all I bought on Newbury Street, a shot at using their postage now and then.

And today I have to make a few shopping stops around here. I'm so outmoded I think of Hoffman's as being avant garde. I've a devotee of large buildings with wrinkled racks of clothes smashed together. I'm an old hand at holding the curtain of the telephone booth size dressing room closed with my teeth while trying on clothes.

This morning someone discreetly attempted to tuck the label of my blouse under the collar where it wouldn't show like an unseemly slip strap. I asked her not to do that. After seeing labels again, if I've got any, I want them to show.

Joan Pinkham

The little house in our neighborhood has looked forlorn and neglected since its owner died last spring. Surrounded by woods and overgrown pink phlox, it's being restored now by an enterprising builder. In the process he unearthed some dusty, yellowed newspapers and thanks to an ever-thoughtful brother of mine who spied the fragile remnants dated Aug. 12, 1935, suggested that they might be the making of yet another column.

In those days, Marjorie Mills lectured and wrote about food and her daily column in the Boston Globe was a treasury of good, old Yankee recipes. Featured in this particular edition were baked lobster, cherry cobbler and blueberry dumplings. Unfortunately, the page is so tattered and torn that, now when blueberries are ripe for the picking, I'm going to substitute this recipe which is a family favorite of ours and is called

BLUEBERRY SLUMP

1 qt. blueberries
1 c. brown sugar
1/4 tsp. salt
1 T vinegar
Bring above to boil in large saucepan.
1½ c. flour
1 T shortening
1/2 tsp. salt
3 tsp. baking powder

Combine above four ingredients and add 2/3 c. milk. Drop by teaspoonfuls onto blueberry mixture (like dumplings). Cover tightly until cooked. Serve warm with whip cream or ice cream.

To anyone under 50, the name "Dorothy Dix" means nothing, but her column of "Advice to the Lovelorn," accompanied by her forbidding, stern picture, was as popular as today's Ann Landers. On this particular Sunday she warned her readers: "What men and women were before marriage, they'll be after marriage—only more so." Some of her more skeptical readers wondered how "Miss" Dix (she was what was then called an "old maid"), was such an authority on marriage, but she confidently concluded her column by saying: "After marriage we still run true to form and are clever or dull, high-tempered or amiable, kind or cruel, some account or no-account even as we were before." All of which has abolutely nothing to do with this next recipe which would be great to serve as a nibble if you're expecting a crowd this Labor Day weekend.

CEREAL CRISP

1/2 pkg. Wheat Chex
3/4 pkg. Rice Chex
1/4 pkg. Cheerios
1/2 pkg. Slim Jane Pretzels
1/2 lb. butter
1/2 tsp. garlic powder
1 tsp. celery salt.

Melt butter, add seasonings and pour over cereals, mixing thoroughly. Bake about 3/4 hours in 350 degree oven.

With no television to watch, this old edition of the Globe was awash with news of radio stars such as Kate Smith who was starting a new show called "Kate Smith and her Swanee Music;" Richard Himber, conductor of the Studebaker Champions who was to "slip a fiddle solo into his next program." Ray Perkins, Singing' Sam and Theodore Webb were mentioned also. There was a column by Will Rogers and a feature on Sen. Huey Long, the Louisania Kingfish and his family who were summering at Kennebuck Beach, Me. News of the movie stars features a story on the Queen of Hollywood, Mary Pickford. Conrad's, a department store once located on Winter St. in town, was having a sale, with dresses marked down from $7.95 to $2.88, home frocks originally $1.19 to 59¢ and "corsettes of batiste with lace tops and elastic gores" were a mere $5.00. Even Marshfield made that edition in a column listing summer theatres from Maine to Martha's Vineyard and it read as follows: "Marshfield Players is offering this week the new mystery drama by Agatha Christie called 'Black Coffee.' The cast will include Fay Roope, Betty Campbell, William Mendrek, Marjorie Walsh and David Sausser, with Arthur Holman directing . . . " If any of our readers can tell us more about the Marshfield Players, I'm sure it would be of interst to us all. In the meantime, here's a way Fay Newton suggests for using garden vegetables to make this favorite Spanish recipe which can be served cold as a soup, or refreshing drink.

GAZPACHO

1 lg. can tomato juice, 32 oz., or substitute fresh tomatoes
1 whole cucumber, chopped
1 green pepper, seeded and chopped
2 stalks celery, chopped
1 medium onion, chopped
1 tsp. powdered beef bouillon
1/4 c. vinegar
Add to taste—parsley, salt, pepper, garlic powder, Worcestershire.

Whirl in blender. Chill well before serving. If served as a cold soup, top with dollop of curried mayonnaise.

5:56 p.m., Received call from Group Boston C.G. giving this unit information on a 35 ft. sailing vessel by the name of "Wanderlust," which was overdue on a trip from Portsmouth harbormaster, N.H., to Salem, MA. A preliminary search of local harbormaster turned up negative. Shortly thereafter this unit was informed that the vessel was located and was safe.

6:45 p.m., Received call via VHF-FM marine radio from the vessel, "Kathleen II," stating they were disabled and disoriented somewhere offshore. A C.G. unit was dispatched and found the vessel 10 miles east of Boston Harbor and towed the vessel to Scituate harbormaster.

7:04 p.m., Received call from the Scituate harbormaster stating that the vessel, "Quoddy III," was taking on water at its mooring off of Young's Boat Yard in Scituate Harbor. A C.G. unit was immediately dispatched and dewatered and towed the vessel along with the help of Scituate harbormaster, to be hauled out at Young's Boat Yard.
